Contributors

Emily Abrams Ansari is an assistant professor of music history at the University of Western Ontario. Her research considers national identity, politics, and music in the United States, particularly during the Cold War. She has published articles on this topic in a number of forums, including the Journal of the Society for American Music and Diplomatic History. Her article on Ulysses Kay's opera Jubilee in American Music won the 2014 ASCAP Deems Taylor/Virgil Thomson Prize.

Raoul F. Camus is a professor emeritus of music at the City University of New York. A retired army reserve bandmaster, he is a member of AMS, HBS and IMMS, a life member of ACB, CBDNA, CBMR and WASBE, and holds honorary memberships in ABA, IGEB, and NBA. A founder and past president of the Sonneck Society (now the Society for American Music), he has written articles on bands and their repertoire for journals, encyclopedias, and the Alta Musica series.

Mark Clague researches music in the United States with a focus on musical institutions in Chicago and teaches at the University of Michigan as an associate professor of musicology, American culture, and non-profit management. He served as cities and institutions editor for the Grove Dictionary of American Music, 2nd edition, and directs Michigan's Gershwin Initiative as editor-in-chief of the George and Ira Gershwin Critical Edition. To share new research on the history of the U.S. national anthem, he manages starspangledmusic.org, and he also serves as co-editor-in-chief of the scholarly edition series Music of the United States of America.

Jessica Getman is a Ph.D. candidate at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor. She holds master's degrees in historical performance and musicology from Boston University, where her thesis project examined eighteenth-century French vaudeville. Her primary research focus is on music in science fiction film and television, and her dissertation explores music and social discourse in the original series of Star Trek. She also currently studies music in fan communities.

Michael W. Harris holds a Ph.D. in musicology and is currently an instructional librarian in the Department of Special Collections and Preservation at the University of Colorado Boulder Libraries. His articles, essays, and reviews have appeared in Cinema Journal, Flow, Asian Music, and the Journal of the Society for American Music, and he has presented extensively on topics related to film music. He is currently working on a book on the film collaborations between composer Fumio Hayasaka and director Akira Kurosawa.

Jake Johnson is a cultural historian focusing on American musical life in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. He is also a collaborative pianist and musical director, having served on vocal coaching and accompanying faculties at Oklahoma City University, DePaul University, and the Hawaii Performing Arts Festival, among other institutions. He is currently pursuing a Ph.D. in musicology at the University of California, Los Angeles.

Joanna Love is an assistant professor of music at the University of Richmond. She has published in the Journal of Music History Pedagogy and has a forthcoming article in Music and Politics, titled “Branding a Cool Celebrity President: Advertising with Popular Music in the 2012 Election.” She is currently working on a book that examines intersections among pop music, MTV, corporate advertising, and the music industry from the mid-1980s to the present.

Eric Porter is a professor of history and history of consciousness at the University of California Santa Cruz. His research interests include black cultural and intellectual history, U.S. cultural history, critical race and ethnic studies, and music studies. His most recent book is New Orleans Suite: Music and Culture in Transition (2013), a collaboration with the photographer Lewis Watts.

Marianna Ritchey is an assistant professor of music history at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst. She has published and presented work on Hector Berlioz, medieval plainchant, film music, and contemporary classical music. She spent many years touring internationally in various bands and co-wrote the January 2014 theme song for the feminist website Rookie.

Travis D. Stimeling is an assistant professor of music history at West Virginia University. He is the editor of The Country Music Reader (Oxford University Press, 2014) and the author of Cosmic Cowboys and New Hicks: The Countercultural Sounds of Austin’s Progressive Country Music Scene (Oxford University Press, 2011).
