EDITOR

Dell Hymes, University of Virginia

Language in Society is an international journal of sociolinguistics, concerned with all branches of speech and language as aspects of social life. It publishes empirical articles of general theoretical, comparative, or methodological interest. Content varies from predominantly linguistic to predominantly social but does involve both poles of the journal's field of concern in some explicit way. The journal aims to strengthen international scholarship and cooperation in this field. In addition to original articles, the journal publishes reviews of recent books, brief accounts of work in progress and notes or comments on points arising from recent publications.

LANGUAGE VARIATION AND CHANGE

EDITORS

Anthony Kroch, University of Pennsylvania

William Labov, University of Pennsylvania

David Sankoff, Université de Montréal

This is the only journal dedicated exclusively to the study of linguistic variation and the capacity to deal with systematic and inherent variation in synchronic and diachronic linguistics. The study of variation is concerned with the impact of the interaction of language, culture and society on the structures and processes that have traditionally constituted the discipline of linguistics. The journal will concentrate on the details of linguistics structure in actual speech production and processing. It will publish original research reports that are based on data of language production, either written or oral, including contemporary or historical sources. This is of vital interest to sociologists, phonologists, linguists, sociolinguists, psychologists, anthropologists and dialectologists.

Robert B. Kaplan, Editor-in-Chief

Now in its ninth year, the Annual Review of Applied Linguistics continues to survey research in the field of applied linguistics and to comment on trends and new directions in the field. Providing, on the average, 500 new citations each year, the Annual Review of Applied Linguistics is an invaluable source for all applied linguists, language teachers, and students of linguistics.
