Covenants Without the Sword: Public Opinion and British Defense Policy 1931-1935

Patrick Kyba

Constitutes a major and comprehensive reevaluation of British defence policy in the early 1930s. The author traces the evolution of British opinion toward rearmament, from opposition to approval, between 1931 and 1935 and assesses the impact of this opinion on the formation of the Government's defence policy. The book will be of interest to historians, students of policy decisions and public opinion, and persons interested in the events leading to World War II.

Estate Management in Eighteenth-Century England: The Building of the Leveson-Gower Fortune

J.R. Wordie

"An important story . . . This well-documented account of earls and dukes who profited both from improving agriculture and developing industry contrasts in several ways with the more celebrated case of the Cokes . . . and should be acquired by all libraries serving courses in British history, upper-division undergraduate and above."

Our Common History: The Transformation of Europe

Paul Thompson and Natasha Burchardt, eds.

A collection of papers by historians and sociologists dealing with the use of oral history in research on 20th century Europe. The researchers evaluate the strengths and weaknesses of oral history methods and their effects upon the individuals and groups being interviewed. Fascinating stories are unearthed by research on the working class, women, peasants, and on political events such as the various resistance movements in Italy and the Netherlands.

Wales in the Early Middle Ages (Series: Studies in the Early History of Britain)

Wendy Davies

Davies uses all available sources to piece together a picture of pre-conquest Wales: its land, social ties and strata, politics and kings, and the Church. "A very valuable appendix considers the value of various kinds of sources: records, laws, narrative sources, poems and stories, scholarly and liturgical writings, and non-Welsh sources . . . This is a valuable addition to its series and is recommended for all college and university libraries."

The Rise and Fall of Scottish History, 1707-1939

R.H. Campbell

This study explores the reasons for Scottish economic decline in the interwar period. Campbell argues that the rise of wage rates in the early 20th century combined with the gradual exhaustion of natural resources such as coal, seriously undermined Scottish competitiveness in the national and world marketplace. An important work of economic history.

The Jewish Community in British Politics

GEOFFREY ALDERMAN, University of London. This is the first study ever made of Jewish involvement in British political life and of the electoral politics of Anglo-Jewery. It spans the period from the Readmission of the Jews into England until the present day and draws on a wide range of historical sources, including poll books, electoral registers, and private papers deposited in England and Israel. For the contemporary period the author has drawn on his own sample survey of Jewish voters and interviews.

High and Low Politics in Modern Britain

Edited by MICHAEL BENTLEY and JOHN STEVENSON, both of the University of Sheffield. In recent years, widespread controversy has arisen about the influence of ideologies and popular pressures on the closed world of "high" politics, the politics of the British government's professional élite. Beginning with 1840 and extending to the present day, the ten essays in this collection cover influences affecting the formulation and implementation of policy, "low" political pressure groups and their effect on governmental behavior, and the relationship between ideology and party practice.

Thomas Chalmers and the Godly Commonwealth in Scotland

STEWART J. BROWN, University of Georgia. Thomas Chalmers (1780-1847), the Scottish Evangelical social reformer and ecclesiastical politician, is probably best known for his role in the Disruption of 1843 in which he led nearly half the membership out of the Established Church to form the Free Church of Scotland. This biography places Chalmers' leadership within the context of his larger struggle for comprehensive social reform.

Prize Information

THE BRITISH COUNCIL PRIZE IN THE HUMANITIES

The North American Conference on British Studies announces the 1983 competition for the British Council Prize in the Humanities. The prize of $750 (supported by a grant from the British Council) is awarded annually for the best book published anywhere by a North American scholar in any aspect of British studies within the following humanistic disciplines: literary history, literary criticism, history of art and architecture, history of music, history of religion and philosophy, history of ideas, intellectual history. (The competition is not open to works in the social sciences, including political, diplomatic, social history, etc. for which the John Ben Snow Prize has been established.) Nominations may be made by the author or by the publisher of the book to be nominated. No publisher may nominate more than one title in any one year.

The 1983 competition covers books published in 1982. Separate copies of the letter of nomination and of the book nominated should be sent by July 1, 1983 to each member of the Prize Committee (please mark packages "CBS Prize Committee"):

THE JOHN BEN SNOW FOUNDATION PRIZE IN HISTORY AND THE SOCIAL SCIENCES

The prize is awarded annually to a North American author for the best book in History and the Social Sciences in the field of British studies. The field includes most of Irish history. Studies involving the Empire-Commonwealth are eligible if they focus on relationships with Britain and British civilization. Books in the social sciences must be strongly oriented toward contributing to an understanding of the development or character of British civilization in one or more of its aspects. The book may be published anywhere in the world; nominations may be made by the author or by the publisher. The amount of the prize is $750.

The next award of the prize will be made in Autumn 1983, to a book published in 1981 or 1982. Thereafter the prize will be awarded to a book published the preceding calendar year.

Separate copies of the letter of nomination and of the book should be sent directly by May 15, 1983 to each member of the prize committee:
