This international journal is devoted to the history of the Arabic sciences, mathematics and philosophy in the world of Islam between the eighth and the eighteenth centuries in a cross-cultural context. It publishes original studies of the highest standard on the history of these disciplines as well as studies of the inter-relations between Arabic sciences and philosophy and Greek, Indian, Chinese, Latin, Byzantine, Syriac and Hebrew sciences and philosophy. Arabic Sciences and Philosophy casts new light on the growth of these disciplines as well as on the social and ideological context in which this growth took place. Articles are published in English, French or German with abstracts in French and English.

*The 1997 volume will include a special issue,
'Arabic into Latin'.*

THE MAKING OF IRAQ, 1900-1963

Capital, Power, and Ideology Samira Haj

"Theoretically sophisticated, analytically sound, cogently argued, and lucidly written, Haj's book makes the history and politics of Iraq from 1932 to 1958 much clearer than any previous work. Its usefulness has been further increased by the Gulf War and its continuing aftermath. The potboilers written in the wake of that war have added to the confusion, much of which is cleared up by Haj's work. The book is solidly based and researched in the essential Arab sources." — Robert Olson, University of Kentucky

This book's innovative approach makes it an important intervention into the field of modern Iraqi and Arab history. Samira Haj's discussion of the factors that led to, and paradoxically caused the failure of, the 1958 revolution in Iraq forms the framework for her critique of conventional Eurocentric notions of nationalism, revolution, and modernity. Haj explains the pervasive violence of Iraq's political scene not by invoking ageless images of sectarian strife and irrational bloodlust but by showing that the violent political battles of the 1950s and 1960s were the result of fundamental changes in the system of ownership and agricultural production during the nineteenth century.

"This book is extremely interesting to read. Haj covers two significant topics—the Iraqi revolution and the role of the agrarian problem in that revolution. Her book is rich both in data and interpretation for showing the complexities and regional diversity of the agrarian problem. It is also excellent in relating this to the social structure." — Ervand Abrahamian, Baruch College, City University of New York

"Samira Haj contributes to our understanding of the modern history of Iraq by addressing a number of key questions. She examines socioeconomic transformations and the emergence of new classes and political alliances, the role of oil in perpetuating both class divisions and underdevelopment, and the revolution of 1958 and its eventual defeat. Above all, she highlights the agrarian question as the site of contestation between the contending social forces."

The Maghrib in Question

Essays in History and Historiography

Edited by Michel Le Gall and
Kenneth Perkins

A wealth of historical writing dealing with the Maghrib (Morocco, Algeria, Tunisia, and Libya) has been published during the roughly forty years since European colonial control ended in the region. This book provides a "state of the field" survey of this postcolonial Maghribi historiography. Containing thirteen essays by leading Maghribi and North American scholars, the book is divided into three sections which cover the Maghrib as a whole and the individual countries of the Maghrib, and explores theoretical issues and case studies.

The Sinai

A Physical Geography

By Ned Greenwood

Greenwood offers a complete, up-to-date physical geography of Sinai. After an introductory chapter that situates Sinai within world history and geography, he focuses in detail on the following areas: plate tectonics and geology, geomorphology and drainage, weather and climate, soils, and biogeography. The concluding chapter explores the human geography of Sinai, including the pressures currently posed by population growth, political extremism, and environmental constrictions on development. The author offers a fully rounded picture of the physical environment of Sinai that will be vital reading for everyone concerned about the future of this strategic yet fragile land.

Curfew

A Novel

By Adalet Agaoglu

Translated by John Goulden

The author uses the conversations of seven characters with each other, as well as their inner thoughts, to reveal the past and to fantasize about the future. The reader comes to see the characters as whole people struggling with crucial issues in their lives and also gains fascinating psychological and political insights into twentieth-century Turkey, caught between the old Ottoman past and an uncertain westward-oriented future.

Ottoman Lyric Poetry

An Anthology

By Walter G. Andrews, Najaat
Black, and Mehmet Kalpaklı

In this anthology, the first major English translation of Ottoman poetry in nearly a century, the authors offer free verse translations of 75 lyric poems. These poems (whose original Ottoman Turkish texts are also included) span a period from the fourteenth through the early twentieth centuries. In addition to the poems, the authors provide concise background information on Ottoman history and literature, informative notes to the poems, and brief biographies of the poets, giving readers sufficient context to understand the poems, without burdening the reading experience.

Journey through Kurdistan

By Mary Ann Smothers Bruni

Bruni's experiences as a photo-journalist traveling through Kurdish Iraq and Turkey between 1990 and 1995 involved very personal encounters with the residents of city and village, as well as the countryside and tent camps. Eighty-three color plates show the stark, yet beautiful land of Kurdistan under the stress of political strife and war. Her accompanying essay describes the people's lives during a time of great hardship, particularly the lives of women, whose bravery and hospitality were especially notable. Bruni's words and pictures offer compelling testimony to the tenacity of the Kurdish people.

Commodity and Exchange in the Mongol Empire

A Cultural History of Islamic Textiles

Thomas T. Allsen

In the thirteenth century the Mongols created a vast transcontinental empire that transported skilled artisans from one cultural zone to another. Among those transported were Muslim textile workers, resettled in China, where they made clothes for the imperial court. In a fascinating account, the author considers the significance of cloth and color in the political and cultural life of the Mongols.

The Persian Presence in the Islamic World

Richard G. Hovannisian and Georges Sabagh, Editors

In this volume, distinguished scholars reassess the Persian contribution to the Islamic world. The major essay by Ehsan Yarshater casts fresh light on that role, challenging the view that Islamic culture declined after the ninth century. In fact, he maintains, the adoption of Persian as the medium of literary expression meant that by the sixteenth century, Persian literary and intellectual paradigms had been cultivated in the greater part of the Islamic world. The ensuing essays are devoted to specific aspects of that contribution.
