About the Authors

Nicholas Blomley is a geographer by training, with an interest in the ways in which law and space are mutually constitutive. He is author of Law, Space and the Geographies of Power (Guilford, 1994). He has been engaged in a research project on Vancouver's Downtown East-side for the past four years, looking especially at how conceptions and practices relating to real property shape space, place, and political practice. He aims to extend this research through an analysis of the relations between property, violence, and nature.

Kitty Calavita is Professor of Criminology, Law and Society at the University of California, Irvine. She is the author of Inside the State: The Bracero Program, Immigration, and the INS (Routledge, 1992) and Big-Money Crime: Fraud and Politics in the S&L Crisis (with Henry Pontell and Robert Tillman; University of California Press, 1996). She has also published articles on immigration policymaking in the United States and in Italy. She is currently working on a historical analysis of the enforcement of the Chinese Exclusion Law of 1882, focusing on the paradoxes inherent in the law and the dialectical relationship between enforcement and resistance.

Tyler Harrison is Assistant Professor of Speech and Theater Arts at Eastern Kentucky University. His research interests focus on the role of language in dispute processes. He is currently investigating procedural justice and the narrative transformation of disputes in organizational ombuds processes.

Lesley A. Jacobs is Associate Professor of Law & Society and Philosophy at York University in Toronto. His research focuses on theories of social justice and rights and the implications for social policy in the United States and Canada. He is the author of Rights and Deprivation (Oxford, 1993), Workfare: Does It Work? Is It Fair? (IRPP, 1995), and The Democratic Vision of Politics Prentice-Hall, 1997). Currently, he is completing a book tentatively titled Pursuing Equality: The Theory and Practice of Egalitarian Justice.

Michelle Johnson is Visiting Assistant Professor at the College of Wooster (Ohio). Her research interests focus on methodological approaches to social support processes and the role of holiday rituals in the family.

Law & Society Review, Volume 32, Number 3 (1998) © 1998 by The Law and Society Association. All rights reserved. Daniel P. Mears is a postdoctoral research fellow with the Center for Criminology and Criminal Justice Research, located in the Department of Sociology at the University of Texas at Austin, and teaches a course on deviance at Southwestern University. His research interests include evaluation of juvenile and criminal justice sentencing reforms, modeling juvenile justice sanctioning, developing and applying theories of delinquency and crime, and exploring the relationship between racial differentiation and homicide. He currently is working on a study of juvenile court intake processes in Texas and also is involved in several collaborative projects.

Calvin Morrill is Associate Professor of Sociology and in the Psychology, Policy, and Law Program at the University of Arizona. He is author of The Executive Way: Conflict Management in Corporations (University of Chicago Press, 1995) and has published numerous articles on organizational conflict, culture, language, and change. He is currently beginning a field study on competing narratives of institutionalization in the field of transnational environmental conflict resolution and contributing to a collaborative field study on the social organization of conflict management in an ethnically diverse, urban high school.

Paul J. Wahlbeck ia an Assistant Professor of Political Science at George Washington University. In addition to legal change and development, his research interests include strategic behavior on the Supreme Court. His work has been published in a number of journals, including the American Political Science Review, the American Journal of Political Science, and the Journal of Politics.