

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

JÓHANNA KRISTÍN BIRNIR is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of Buffalo–SUNY. Her work centers on voters and party system developments in new democracies in Eastern Europe and Latin America. Birnir is the author of Ethnicity and Electoral Politics (Cambridge University Press—in press) and her papers have appeared in Comparative Political Studies, Studies in Comparative International Development, and other professional journals.

SILVIA BORZUTZKY is Director of the Political Science program and Associate Teaching Professor of Political Science and International Relations at Carnegie Mellon University. She is the author of Vital Connections: Politics, Social Security and Inequality in Chile (Notre Dame University Press, 2002) and coeditor of After Pinochet: The Chilean Road to Capitalism and Democracy (University Press of Florida, 2006). She is also the author of more than thirty articles dealing with Chilean politics and society, as well as Latin American politics and international relations.

DAVID S. BROWN is an Associate Professor in the Department of Political Science and a Research Associate at the Institute of Behavioral Science at the University of Colorado at Boulder. Dr. Brown's research focuses on democracy and globalization's impact on economic development and government spending on education, health, and social security. He is currently working on a project that examines Walmart's impact on social capital and civil society.

J. CHRISTOPHER BROWN is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Geography and the Environmental Studies Program at the University of Kansas in Lawrence. His research focuses on the human and ecological dynamics of development in Latin America, especially the Brazilian Amazon. Dr. Brown's other current research involves studying the expansion of mechanized soybean agriculture in Amazonia.

DENNIS CONWAY is Professor of Geography and Latin American and Caribbean Studies at Indiana University, Bloomington. He has written more than 100 articles and book chapters on Caribbean urbanization, internal and transnational migration, economic development, tourism, and the geographical and environmental consequences of these societal processes. His recent books include The Experience of Return Migration: Caribbean Perspectives (2005), The Contemporary Caribbean (2004), and Globalization's Contradictions: Geographies of Discipline, Destruction and Transformation (2006). He is currently conducting research on transnational migration in the contemporary Caribbean, specifically focusing on young returning professionals' migrant experiences in Trinidad and Tobago and Grenada.

Latin American Research Review, Vol. 42, No. 1, February 2007

© 2007 by the University of Texas Press, P.O. Box 7819, Austin, TX 78713-7819

ROBERT J. COTTROL is the Harold Paul Green Research Professor of Law and a Professor of History and Sociology at the George Washington University. He is a specialist on the legal and social history of race relations and is researching the role of law in constructing systems of racial hierarchy in the Americas. He is coauthor of Brown v. Board of Education: Caste, Culture and the Constitution (University Press of Kansas, 2003).

RAFAEL DE LA DEHESA is an Assistant Professor of Sociology at the College of Staten Island, City University of New York. He recently completed his Ph.D. in Government at Harvard University. His current work focuses on the relationship between LGBT activists and political parties in Brazil and Mexico.

SCOTT W. DESPOSATO is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Science at the University of California, San Diego. His general research interests include democratic institutions, campaigning, mass behavior, and political methodology. Specific projects have examined redistricting in the United States, electoral rules and federalism in Brazil, party-switching by politicians, and statistical methods for studying legislatures. His latest project, for which he has received a National Science Foundation award, examines the determinants and impacts of negative campaigning across different institutional settings.

MICHELLE DION is Assistant Professor of International Affairs at the Georgia Institute of Technology. Her research examines the political economy of welfare policy in Latin America. She is finishing a book manuscript on the political development of welfare in Mexico since the Mexican Revolution.

TODD A. EISENSTADT is Assistant Professor of Government at American University. He wrote the article that appears in this journal while he was on leave during the 2005–06 academic year as a visiting researcher at the University of California, San Diego's Center for U.S.-Mexican Studies. His writings on Mexico's democratization include Courting Democracy in Mexico (Cambridge University Press, 2004), and he is currently completing a manuscript Indians by Choice: Traditional Societies and the State in Southern Mexico.

JANA MORGAN completed her Ph.D. at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill in 2005. She is Assistant Professor of Political Science at the University of Tennessee–Knoxville. Her research interests include partisan identification, political parties and party system change as well as public opinion in Latin America. Her work has been published in Journal of Politics, Comparative Political Studies, and Political Research Quarterly. Currently, she is preparing a book manuscript on party system transformation and collapse.

LAURENCE E. PRESCOTT is Associate Professor of Spanish and African American Studies in the Department of Spanish, Italian and Portuguese at the Pennsylvania State University–University Park. His research interests include Latin American literature, Afro-Hispanic literature and culture, and Colombian literature. The author of Without Hatreds or Fears: Jorge Artel and the Struggle for Black Literary Expression in Colombia (Wayne State University Press, 2000), recognized as a Choice 2001 Outstanding Academic Title, and Candelario Obeso y la iniciación de la poesía negra en Colombia (Instituto Caro y Cuervo, 1985), he also has published in Revista Iberoamericana, Crítica Hispánica, Revista de Estudios Colombianos, América Negra, Afro-Hispanic Review, and other journals. His current research projects include a study of African American life and culture in Spanish American travel literature and a bibliography of Afro-Colombian writers.

BEATRIZ J. RIZK is the Director of the Educational Unit of the International Hispanic Theatre Festival of Miami and a Board Member of NALAC (National Association of Latino Arts and Culture). She is the author of more than 100 articles and chapters on Latina/o and Latin American theater. Her books include El Nuevo Teatro Latinoamericano: Una lectura histórica (1987), Enrique Buenaventura: La dramaturgia de la creación colectiva (1991), Posmodernismo y teatro en América Latina: Teorías y prácticas en el umbral del siglo XXI (2001), and Teatro y diáspora: Testimonios escénicos latinoamericanos (2002). She also co-authored the book Latin American Popular Theatre: The First Five Centuries (1993). Her most recent book, coedited with Yana Elsa Brugal, is Rito y representación: Los sistemas mágico-religiosos en la cultura cubana contemporánea (2003).

CAROLINA ROCHA is Visiting Assistant Professor at the University of Illinois in Urbana. Her work on contemporary Southern Cone narrative has appeared in journals in France, Mexico, and the United States. Her article "A partir del exilio: La exploración de la identidad en la narrativa de Alicia Dujovne Ortiz" has been included in Aves de paso: Autores latinoamericanos entre el exilio y transculturación (Iberoamericana, 2005), edited by Erna Pfeiffer and Birgit Baumgartner. Forthcoming publications are "Crisis de identidad: La ingratitud (1990) de Matilde Sánchez" in Hispanic Journal and "Resisting from the Margins: Two Generations of Argentine Women Working against Officialdom" in Brújula. Her current research interests are the role of memory in post-dictatorial Argentine society and the role of women in twentieth-century Spanish American nations.

WILLIAM D. SMITH is Assistant Professor of Anthropology at Western Oregon University. His recent field research has examined environmental history, transformations in peasant economies, and indigenous rights movements in the Sierra Norte region of the state of Puebla, Mexico. In future research he plans to explore the political ecology of colonia settlements in the Mexico-U.S. borderlands.

PATRICK TIMMONS is Assistant Professor of Justice Studies at San José State University, California. He is coeditor of "Punishment and Death," a special issue of the journal Radical History Review (2006). His writing and research have appeared in the Texas Observer, Counterpunch, and The Cultural Lives of Capital Punishment (Stanford University Press, 2005). He is currently writing a book on the changing fortunes of capital punishment in nineteenth-century Mexico, "The Politics of Punishment and War: Law's Violence during the Mexican Reform, ca. 1840 to 1870." He maintains a supporting research field into press accounts of Mexican nationals condemned to die in present-day Texas.

DONNA LEE VAN COTT is Assistant Professor of Political Science and Latin American Studies at Tulane University. Her research interests include the politics of Bolivia and other Andean countries, indigenous peoples' movements, ethnic conflict, constitutional reform, and political parties. Dr. Van Cott is author of The Friendly Liquidation of the Past: The Politics of Diversity in Latin America (University of Pittsburgh Press, 2000), and From Movements to Parties in Latin America: The Evolution of Ethnic Politics (Cambridge University Press, 2005).