Basic Documents on African Affairs

Edited by Ian Brownlie

Existing collections of documents on African affairs have a marked historical aspect, and many important contemporary documents are not easily accessible even in specialized libraries. This volume fills a gap in the literature. It includes material on African intergovernmental organizations, economic development, territorial problems, self-determination and racial discrimination in South Africa, and relations with non-African powers. £4.50 Paper covers £1.90

The Azande

History and Political Institutions

E. E. Evans-Pritchard

This book reconstructs the history of a once famous people, the Azande of Central Africa. It is an attempt to relate the development of their institutions to their historical experience, and also to give a background to the author's two earlier works on this people: Witchcraft, Oracles and Magic among the Azande (£2.50) and The Zande Trickster (£2.10). 6 plates £4

International Boundaries of East Africa

A. C. McEwen

Each boundary of the three East African states, Kenya, Tanzania, and Uganda, is examined in relation to international law and against its historical background. Texts of formal documents establishing the boundaries are given, and other influencing factors such as state conduct, succession to treaties, self-determination, and customary trans-frontier rights are discussed. Frontispiece 15 maps £3.50

A Federation of Southern Africa

Leo Marquard

Leo Marquard puts the case for the partition of the Republic into eleven regions and their incorporation into a federation that would also include Lesotho, Swaziland, Botswana, and South-West Africa. The advantages, in economic as well as social terms, are shown to be so great that this book could make a major contribution to a debate of crucial world importance. 1 map £2

African Traders and Economic Development in Ghana

Peter C. Garlick

This book attempts to identify the problems of an important group of African businessmen in Ghana. Written primarily for African leaders concerned to understand and promote a potentially major force for growth, this study should interest all social scientists concerned with developmental change in Africa. 3 graphs £2.25
