A fun learning experience with CAEP!

Pr. CYANOKIT[®] 5 g
HYDROXOCOBALAMIN

If you encounter a smoke inhalation victim, they may have cyanide poisoning

If you suspect cyanide poisoning, respond with Cyanokit[®]

Cyanokit[®] contains hydroxocobalamin, an antidote indicated for the treatment of known or suspected cyanide poisoning. Cyanokit[®] is to be administered together with appropriate decontamination and supportive measures!

- Designed for use at the scene or in the hospital¹
- Now in one 5 g vial¹

To order Cyanokit[®] or for more information,
call EMD Serono Customer Care at 1-800-387-9749

Warnings and Precautions: In addition to Cyanokit[®], treatment of cyanide poisoning must include immediate attention to airway patency, adequacy of oxygenation and hydration, cardiovascular support, and management of any seizure activity. Consideration should be given to decontamination measures based on the route of exposure. Cyanokit[®] does not substitute for oxygen therapy and must not delay the set up of the above measures.

Contraindications: None.

Adverse events: Systematic collection of adverse events was not done in all clinical studies involving known or suspected cyanide-poisoning victims who were treated with hydroxocobalamin. The interpretation of causality in these studies is limited due to lack of a control group and due to circumstances of administration (e.g., use in fire victims). The most common adverse events (>5%) in healthy subjects who received hydroxocobalamin are reversible red colouration of the skin and mucous membranes (erythema), marked dark red colouration of the urine (chromaturia), eye redness, rash (acneiform), pruritus, transient increase in blood pressure, decrease in the percentage of lymphocytes, abdominal discomfort, nausea, dizziness, headache, chest discomfort, injection site reaction, and sore or dry throat. Other less common adverse events (<5%) include: pollakiuria (frequent urination), face edema, urticaria, increase in blood amylase levels, flatulence, loose stools, vomiting, general discomfort, feeling hot and/or cold, joint/back pain, restlessness, dyspnea, eye swelling, eye irritation, dyspepsia, diarrhea, dysphagia, hematochezia, peripheral edema, memory impairment, pleural effusion, and allergic reactions including angioneurotic edema and skin eruption.

Please consult the Cyanokit[®] Product Monograph for further information.
