Field Researches in Tanganyika

DR. EDWARD H. WINTER, Associate Professor of Anthropology at the University of Illinois, and Mr. Thomas Beidelman of the same university are carrying out field work among the Kaguru of east central Tanganyika. This project is under the auspices of the Ford Foundation's Study of Cultural Regularities, directed by Professor Julian Steward.

Bibliography on North and North-east Africa

THIS bibliography on North and North-east Africa, published by the Library of Congress and compiled by Helen F. Conover, completes the survey of writings on Africa, of which the first part—Africa South of the Sahara—was published in June 1957. The two lists are supplementary to the Library of Congress publication of 1952, Introduction to Africa, but the range of works cited has been extended to include those of scholarly as well as of more general interest. The emphasis is on social, economic, and political aspects of the current scene; history and culture are touched upon, but technological and scientific material, particularly with respect to the physical sciences, is excluded. The aim has been to interpret major facts and issues of each country through annotated references to books, pamphlets, or substantial periodical articles. Preference has been given to writings in English, though for North Africa it has been necessary to rely mainly upon French and Spanish studies. No attempt has been made to deal with source material in Arabic. As in Africa South of the Sahara, entries are annotated to indicate material on the same or closely related themes, so that over 200 works receive comment in addition to the 349 numbered entries in the bibliography. Fifteen political areas are covered and there is an index of authors.

Guide to Resources for Commonwealth Studies

THE Guide to Resources for Commonwealth Studies in London, Oxford and Cambridge has been compiled by A. R. Hewitt, the Secretary and Librarian of the Institute of Commonwealth Studies. Its purpose, as set out in the Foreword, is 'to assist advanced research workers, particularly those who have come to Great Britain from overseas, to locate material for the study of the British Commonwealth'. The materials listed fall mainly, but not exclusively, within the fields of history and the social sciences and are limited to libraries and other institutions in London, Oxford, and Cambridge, though it is hoped that the scope may be extended if a further edition is called for. There is a general bibliography, indicating also where detailed bibliographies may be found, and a comprehensive index. The Guide is divided into three parts: Part I is a general survey of resources, listing specialist and other libraries, public archives, parliamentary and official papers, periodicals and newspapers, bibliographies and works of reference. Part II lists individual collections in London, Oxford, and Cambridge. Part III indicates universities in the United Kingdom offering facilities for Commonwealth studies, and gives a list of institutions and organizations concerned with various aspects of Commonwealth affairs.

Among the sources for African studies are the Public Record Office, the Colonial Office, and the Foreign Office; the last was responsible over a period of years for the administration of most of the African territories and its archives contain much material on British interests in Africa before 1885 in the Slave Trade Series of Papers (F.O. 84). Institutions containing papers relating specifically to Africa are listed on pp. 14–15; lists of periodicals p. 44; library resources pp. 51–53. Many of the institutions, libraries, and missionary societies listed on pp. 93–179 contain material relevant to African studies.
