EASTERN ARCTIC PREHISTORY: PALEOESKIMO PROBLEMS

Eastern Arctic Prehistory: Paleoeskimo Problems, Memoir 31 of the Society for American Archaeology, edited by Moreau S. Maxwell, is now available.

Because of the Arctic's environmental constraints and the necessarily limited scope of human biocultural adaptive response, much can be learned there about general cultural processes and systems, at least among hunters, from data not available in more temperate regions. But Arctic study by its nature tends to be isolative. Unlike their colleagues to the south, researchers cannot jump in a car and visit a site where a fellow archaeologist is recovering similar data, and the opportunity for intellectual interchange at meetings is all too short. Eastern Arctic Prehistory is the product of a unique opportunity for ten well-known "chapped-hand" archaeologists to steep themselves for a full week in joint discussion seeking understanding of the processes of human behavior through pursuit of those whom modern Inuit call Tunit.

Contributions by Robert McGhee, James A. Tuck, Guy Mary-Rousselière, Moreau S. Maxwell, Albert A. Dekin, Jr., William Fitzhugh, Elmer Harp, Jr., and Ronald J. Nash call into question "the whole temporal matrix on which we base our interpretations of change, contact, and diffusion," and the simplicity of a former model of culture contact between Dorset and Thule, suggest previously unsuspected nexi linking marginal peoples, and point interesting new directions for the pursuit of arctic prehistory.

Please note that Memoirs of the Society are no longer distributed as a benefit of membership. Cost per copy is $3.00 to members, $5.00 to non-members. Address orders, enclosing payment, to the Society, 1703 New Hampshire Ave., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20009.

NEW FROM COLUMBIA

MIDDLE CLASSIC MESOAMERICA A.D. 400-700

Esther Pasztory, Editor

A groundbreaking, cross-cultural study of Mesoamerica during a crucial 300-year period of ferment, brilliant achievement and sudden collapse. Emphasizing a comparative approach to the area, this collection of essays offers a unique perspective on Mesoamerican cultural history. $20.00

EXPERIMENTAL ARCHEOLOGY

Daniel Ingersoll, John E. Yellen, and William MacDonald, Editors

This comprehensive reader in the growing field of experimental archeology describes the application of experimental methods in all areas of archeological research. A basic text in the field, it explores both the accomplishments of modern archeology and promising avenues for further work. $15.00

ARCHEOLOGY AND A SCIENCE OF MAN

Wilfred T. Neill

Archeology and a Science of Man offers exciting new insights into methodology, showing how the new scientific archeology can productively use the findings of a wide range of disciplines—from ethnology, linguistics, toponymy, and physical anthropology to history, zoology, botany, geology, and more. Generously illustrated with photographs and drawings. $20.00

PREHISTORIC LOCATIONAL BEHAVIOR: A COMPUTER SIMULATION

Larry J. Zimmerman
University of South Dakota

Computer simulation is used to consider how prehistoric villages made locational decisions and what impact these decisions had on the development of settlement patterns. Conclusions derived bear on the length of occupation, importance of climatic change, population size and settlement density. The author concludes with a discussion of the strengths and weaknesses of the approach.

THE IOWA EFFIGY MOUND MANIFESTATION:
AN INTERPRETIVE MODEL

R. Clark Mallam
Luther College

Some researchers have viewed the Effigy Mounds as a localized Wisconsin Woodland phenomenon that expanded into adjacent areas. Others consider them to be a derivative of Hopewell. In this report Mallam argues that one of the prime reasons the Effigy Mounds are imperfectly understood is that an adequate data base has never been secured. His research, based on a study of 1426 mounds in 53 complexes, has resulted in an interpretive model that explains the cultural function of these "enigmatic" features.

Bibliography, 2 tables, 26 figures. LCN 76-18668. Report 9. 1976. 128 pages. $4.00 paperback.

PHYSICAL AFFILIATIONS OF THE ONEOTA PEOPLES

Elizabeth J. Glenn
Ball State University

In this study the author relates what is known of the Oneota archaeologically, linguistically, and ethnohistorically to the physical anthropology of these peoples. Skeletal measurements confirm population differences between Trans-Mississippi Oneota and Wisconsin Oneota and suggest that both groups diverge markedly from Muskogid Middle Mississippian populations.

The Art and Archaeology of PASHASH

By Terence Grieder

This volume is an account of the discovery and excavation of the richest Pre-Columbian burial ever scientifically excavated in Peru. The large collection of ceramics, gold jewelry, and stone and bone artifacts found in their original context and dated by radiocarbon makes possible a unique history of the art of this highland Andean region. Among the important discoveries described is evidence of the use of potters' wheels and lathes, which reverses the long-held contention that these tools were introduced to the Americas by Europeans.

The site and its contents are thoroughly illustrated, and a striking color section is included.

1. THE INDIVIDUAL IN PREHISTORY

STUDIES OF VARIABILITY IN STYLE IN PREHISTORIC TECHNOLOGIES

Edited by JAMES N. HILL and JOEL GUNN

A Volume in the STUDIES IN ARCHEOLOGY Series

The Individual in Prehistory presents perhaps the first systematic attempt to isolate and measure individual variations in ceramic, lithic, and basketry technologies. It also contributes to the ultimate development of a theory of style or form, and points to interesting ways in which individual style variability might be employed in reconstructing certain aspects of prehistoric social organization (such as residence and task units, sodalities, status, craft specialization, and exchange and population movement). Some of the twelve papers emphasize theoretical and methodological concerns; others present the findings of empirical case studies using archaeological, ethnographic, and experimental data.

ISBN: 0-12-348150-3

2. CONSERVATION ARCHAEOLOGY

A GUIDE FOR CULTURAL RESOURCE MANAGEMENT STUDIES

Edited by MICHAEL B. SCHIFFER and GEORGE J. GUMERMAN

A Volume in the STUDIES IN ARCHEOLOGY Series

Conservation Archaeology is the only comprehensive sourcebook on designing and executing archaeological studies under federal historical preservation and environmental legislation. The book first deals with the history, basic issues, and legislative underpinnings of cultural resource management in the United States. It goes on to treat research design and archaeological survey. It then considers how to efficiently meet the information requirements of the 1969 law and other federal legislation, covering ways to estimate the nature and extent of the archaeological resources, their significance, the impact on them of the project, and ways to mitigate this impact. It concludes with a set of case studies that illustrate how cultural resource management studies can make significant research contributions to scientific archaeology.

ISBN: 0-12-642160-0

3. ANTHROPOLOGY IN HISTORIC PRESERVATION

CARING FOR CULTURE'S CLUTTER

By THOMAS F. KING, PATRICIA PARKER HICKMAN and GARY BERG

FROM THE PREFACE:

The involvement of anthropologists in historic preservation has until recently been marginal at best. Archaeologists have worked under the historic preservation laws but have seldom regarded themselves as historic preservationists . . . This book is designed to encourage such involvement. In it, we argue for the centrality of basic anthropological thinking to historic preservation practice, outline how historic preservation works and can work as an influence on government decision making, and suggest ways in which both archaeologists and sociocultural anthropologists can work effectively within the historic preservations system.

1977, 328 pp., $15.00/£10.65
ISBN: 0-12-408250-5

4. MONTE ALBAN: SETTLEMENT PATTERNS AT THE ANCIENT ZAPOTEC CAPITAL

By RICHARD E. BLANTON

With Contributions by: WILLIAM O. AUTRY, JR., STEPHEN KOWALEWSKI, CARL KUTTRUFF, ELSA REDMOND, and CHARLES SPENCER

A Volume in the STUDIES IN ARCHEOLOGY Series

This pathbreaking study presents the results of the first phase of the Valley of Oaxaca Settlement Pattern Project. The book deals with changes through time in the city's population size, spatial organization, and regional role from the time of its founding, about 400 B.C., to the end of the prehispanic sequence. All data are presented including descriptions of the several thousand architectural features mapped as well as all ceramic counts from the nearly 2,000 collections made. The final map is presented at scales of 1:10,000 and as a series of grid squares in greater detail at 1:2000.
