Notice to contributors

The editors welcome articles of general interest to psychiatrists. The Psychiatric Bulletin concentrates on provision of services to people with mental disorders, and psychiatric training. A good length is 1200 words; however, longer articles will be considered. Photographs to accompany articles, where appropriate, are welcome but diagrams and tables should usually not be included. In general there should be no more than five references.

Conference briefings and reviews should be no more than 500 words.

Correspondence on subjects of topical interest is also welcome but letters should be no more than 500 words, with up to three references, and should not include diagrams or tables.

Please send three copies of all submissions, typed double-spaced, and using the Harvard system of referencing as in The British Journal of Psychiatry.

Contributions are accepted for publication on the condition that their substance has not been published or submitted for publication elsewhere. The views expressed in articles published in the Psychiatric Bulletin (except official College material) are the author's own and do not necessarily represent College policy.

The Psychiatric Bulletin operates an independent review system.

Crown Indemnity

When the Crown Indemnity Scheme came into operation in 1990 a number of questions were raised as to how comprehensive was the cover it afforded. One grey area identified was that of trainees working in non-National Health Service establishments who were not receiving fees for this work. An example of this is those doctors in training who have sessions in prisons or other Home Office establishments for which they are not paid a fee but attend as part of their programme. Clarification was sought from the Prison Medical Service who were unable to confirm that the doctor was covered for these sessions. In view of the uncertainty it is recommended that all doctors in training in forensic psychiatry should avail themselves of the cover afforded by the defence societies.
