Adam Smith : Lectures on Jurisprudence

Edited by R. L. Meek, D. D. Raphael, and Peter Stein

In 1958 there came to light a new set of student's notes of the lectures on jurisprudence delivered by Adam Smith at Glasgow in 1762–3. These are in the main much fuller and more informative than the only other extant set (published in 1896 by Edwin Cannan) and they illuminate a number of aspects of Smith's thought. This volume includes both the new notes and, for comparison, the entire Cannan notes, as well as the so-called 'Early Draft of Part of the Wealth of Nations' and two fragments on the division of labour. £20
The Glasgow Edition of the Works and Correspondence of Adam Smith

Annual Survey of Commonwealth Law 1976

Edited by H. W. R. Wade and Harold L. Cryer

This is the twelfth volume of a series with an established place in the literature of the common law world. The commentary which it provides on many hundreds of judicial decisions from most of the jurisdictions of the Commonwealth, together with its collection of legislative material, constitute a unique work of comparative law. The authorship is in the hands of a team of lawyers, who are specialists in the areas of law on which they write. Many parts of the volume, such as those dealing with constitutional and administrative law, fundamental rights, and social services, are of interest not only to lawyers but to all concerned with public affairs whether as administrators or scholars. £35

International Law and the Movement of Persons between States

Guy S. Goodwin-Gill

Few subjects arouse quite the same degree of passionate and partisan argument as the presence of aliens on State territory. Their entry, establishment, and expulsion commonly suppose arbitrary and illimitable powers, but this book shows the limit to State discretion. Controlling rules are revealed by an analysis of treaties, State practice, and domestic laws. Nationality and alienage are also examined, while powers over aliens in general are related to developing standards, including principles of human rights and non-discrimination. £14

An Introduction to the Law of Contract

P. S. Atiyah

This paperback edition replaces the hardback published in 1971 and now out of print. Paper covers £3.50 Clarendon Law Series
