The Journal of the College Theology Society

A journal exploring developments in Catholic theology, the total Christian tradition, human religious experience, and the concerns of creative teaching from the college and university environment.

This issue demands unusual agility for jumping around from Israel's God to Jesus to Reproductive Consciousness to Religious Studies at the State University. Mary Rose D'Angelo considers women, prophecy, and resistance in the early churches' memory as she involves us in "Remembering Jesus." Life experience, sacrifice, praise, and prayer all come together in Frans Jozef van Beeck's reflections on "Israel's God, the Psalms, and the City of Jerusalem." Then we find ourselves in the contemporary world with Phyllis Kaminski's feminist reflections on Mary O'Brien's theory of reproductive consciousness: "Reproducing the World." Robert Hann then takes us into the academic world of the state university to consider its relationship to "Commitment, Theology, and the Dilemma of Religious Studies. . . ."

John Ballweg draws on many years of teaching as he reflects on how "Undergraduates Discover Pierre Teilhard de Chardin." Then Sandra Schneiders responds to the views of William Thompson, Susan Ross, John Koenig, and Mary Gerhart on her Revelatory Text: Interpreting the New Testament as Sacred Scripture. And, as always, our reviewers introduce us to some interesting new books.
