NOTES ON CONTRIBUTORS

FRANK KELSALL was President of SAHGB 2004-2008, Honorary Secretary 1983-1988 and Honorary Treasurer 1988-1994. He was an architectural historian in the London County Council and Greater London Council 1964-1986 and an Inspector of Historic Buildings with English Heritage 1986-1998. He is now a director of the Architectural History Practice, Casework Adviser to the Ancient Monuments Society and Chairman of the London Society.

DR MANOLO GUERCI is Visiting Lecturer in Architectural History in the Department of History of Art, University of Cambridge, and a Post-doctoral Fellow at the Paul Mellon Centre for British Art, London, whose research focuses on domestic architecture, from Early-Modern European palaces to Post-War social housing estates. He was the Jeremy Haworth Research Fellow at St Catharine's College, Cambridge, and previously completed (as the Luisa Aldobrandini scholar, St John's College, Cambridge) a Ph.D. on the Strand palaces of the early seventeenth century. Educated as an architect, he trained and worked on the restoration of historic buildings in France, and has recently researched seventeenth-century construction techniques in Rome. His monograph on Palazzo Mancini is in press in Italy, and he is currently working on another monograph, on Northumberland House in the Strand, (1605-1874), sponsored by the Paul Mellon Centre and the Isaac Newton Trust, as part of a long-term study on all the Strand palaces.

DR AONGHUS MACKECHNIE is an architectural historian and a Principal Inspector with Historic Scotland. His work has focused on the Renaissance-early modern periods in Scotland and on the architectural history of the Highlands. His doctoral thesis, from the University of Edinburgh, was on early seventeenth-century Scottish court and courtier Architecture. He is author of Carragh-Cuimhne (2004), a study of Gaeldom's monuments, and co-author (with Miles Glendinning) of A History of Scottish Architecture (Edinburgh University Press, 1996) and Scottish Architecture (Thames & Hudson, 2004).

DR ANNE BORDELEAU is an architect and professor at the School of Architecture of the University of Waterloo, where she teaches design studio and cultural history (from medieval to modern times). She completed her doctoral dissertation, 'C. R. Cockerell: Architecture, History, Time and Memory', at the Bartlett School of Graduate Studies (University College London), after obtaining her professional degree and post-professional Masters in the history and theory of architecture at McGill University (Montreal). A post-doctoral fellowship from the Paul Mellon Centre for Studies in British Arts has supported her publication of several articles on Cockerell, including this one, and others in The Journal of Architecture and Architectural Theory Review.

DR BRENDAN GRIMES studied architecture at the Dublin Institute of Technology and the Politecnico di Milano. He also holds a BA from the Open University, an M.Litt. from Trinity College Dublin, and in 2005 was awarded his PhD by the National College of Art and Design, Dublin, for his thesis 'The Architecture of Dublin's Neo-Classical Roman Catholic Temples 1803-62'. He has been a lecturer in the Dublin School of Architecture, DIT since 1983. His publications include Irish Carnegie Libraries: A Catalogue and Architectural History, Dublin 1998. His book Majestic Shrines and Graceful Sanctuaries: The Church Architecture of Patrick Byrne 1783-1864 is in press with Irish Academic Press.

DR CHRISTINE MCCARTHY teaches interior architecture at Victoria University, Wellington, New Zealand. She studied architecture at Auckland University, and has taught in the Schools of Architecture and Design at Unitec Institute of Technology, Auckland, and in the Design Studies programme at the University of Otago, Dunedin. Her research areas include architectural representation, New Zealand architectural history and interior architectural theory.

MICHAEL WINDOVER holds degrees in Visual Arts and Liberal Arts and in Art History from the University of Western Ontario, and is currently completing his Ph.D. in Art History at the University of British Columbia, on socio-political implications of Art Deco. He has won several major awards, including from the Social Science and Humanities Research Council of Canada and the Canadian Centre for Architecture, and the Martin Eli Weil Prize for an essay (on 1930s Canadian cinemas) which has been published; he also has an essay on Canadian modernism in press.

DR WILLIAM OWEN HARROD studied architecture and architectural history at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, the University of Bath and the University of Texas at Austin. He received his Master of Architecture from the University of Texas in 1992, and his Doctorate (on Bruno Paul) in 2001. His book Bruno Paul: The Life and Work of a Pragmatic Modernist was published in Germany in 2005, and he has also published scholarly articles in the United States, the Czech Republic and Japan on topics pertaining to the emergence and dissemination of twentieth-century Modernism. He is currently a practising architect and historian in Austin, Texas.
