General Notes

CORRECTION

In the June 1961 issue of The Journal of Laryngology & Otology in the article by Professor F. C. Ormerod on "The Metabolism of the Cochlear and Vestibular End-Organs", the first paragraph on page 566 should read:—

Poulson (1959) and Jensen and Vilstrup (1960) have shown also that the proportion of mucopolysaccharide is greater in the perilymph of the superior parts of the labyrinth—the utricle and semicircular canals—than in the inferior parts—the cochlea and saccule—of the cod fish. They are of the opinion also that all the mucopolysaccharide in the superior part of the cod's labyrinth is hyaluronic acid.
