PEOPLE OF SALÉ

TRADITION AND CHANGE IN A MOROCCAN CITY 1830–1930

Kenneth L Brown

This book explores change over a period of three generations in a Moroccan city long renowned for its Islamic urban tradition. Dr Brown portrays as authentically as possible the tenor of life among these Moroccan townsmen during a particularly dramatic period in their history. He describes the spatial organisation of Salé and its population structure and explains the effect on them of European intervention in North Africa. In analysing the process through which incipient social classes evolved he contends that traditional values were largely maintained and the ideal of a community bound together by culture and social ties was upheld.

'... clearly written, interesting and highly competent ... an original contribution to the comparative study of urbanism and urbanisation' – British Book News

THE ILĀHĪ-NĀMA

Farīd al-Dīn 'Aṭṭār

Translated by J A Boyle

Among the greatest of the Persian Sūfī poets is Farīd al-Dīn 'Aṭṭār. The Ilāhī-nāma, or Book of God, one of his most important works, is one of several mathnavīs in which he illustrated the Sūfī doctrines by means of allegories and anecdotes. A major contribution to our understanding of Persian literature, Professor Boyle's translation provides a detailed and lucid exposé of Islamic mysticism for the historian of religions, while the general reader will be fascinated by the thought-provoking and amusing tales.

Return to the Naked Nagas

CHRISTOPH VON FÜRER-HAIMENDORF

Professor Haimendorf describes life among the aboriginal Naga tribes on India's north-east border. When he first visited them he found a living megalithic culture, but on his return in 1970 their old customs were decaying and he warns of the hazards attached to their transition into the 20th century. (Originally published as The Naked Nagas, this book contains two additional chapters describing his return visits to the area.)

When Men and Mountains Meet

JOHN KEAY

'Traces the course of Himalayan exploration and tortuous power politics in the mid-nineteenth century and describes the adventures – more often misadventures – of the men who probed for the source of Indus and Oxus, dreamed their dreams of Lhasa and Yarkand, or instigated the Great Game, alternatively encouraged or disowned by the powers that be. Fascinating.' The Guardian
