ACLS Postdoctoral Grants for Advanced Training in Chinese Studies

The American Council of Learned Societies has announced a program of postdoctoral grants, funded by the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation to sustain and advance competence in Chinese studies by providing for scholars, who lack them, opportunities to maintain and improve teaching and research skills through advanced language training, further specialization in one's field, or acquisition of new or improved disciplinary training in the social sciences and humanities. Emphasis in this program is on training, rather than research, and applicants will be asked to describe the nature of training requested and state how it is expected to contribute to their intellectual growth and productivity.

Eligibility is restricted to persons in the area of historical or contemporary Chinese studies, who, at the time proposed for tenure, will be within 12 years of receipt of the doctorate and will have taught for at least three years. The deadline for application is December 1, 1976.

Awards will not normally exceed $12,000 and the amount will be prorated according to the length of tenure.

Grants of two kinds will be made:

(1) Postdoctoral Internships for Advanced Training at Major University Centers of Chinese Studies. These internships will be available only to scholars who need to relocate at a major center during the tenure of the grant. Prior consultation by an applicant with the center at which he wants to be associated will be necessary, and the application materials will include a reference form to be completed and returned to the ACLS by the scholar at the center with whom the applicant intends to work. Minimum tenure for the internships will be one semester or two quarters.

(2) Postdoctoral Fellowships for Language and Other Training in East Asia. It is expected that these fellowships will usually be given for the improvement of language skills (Chinese or Japanese), and fellows undertaking language training will normally be required to affiliate with a language teaching center in East Asia; applications for other kinds of field training will also be accepted. Minimum tenure for the fellowships will be six months.

In requesting application forms, please state citizenship or permanent residence, date of award of the doctoral degree, field of specialization, subject of proposed study, period of time for which support is requested, and title of program under which application will be submitted. Application forms are available from: Office of Fellowships and Grants, American Council of Learned Societies, 345 East 46th Street, New York, New York 10017.
