The Contributors

Jacob Viner is Professor of Economics at Princeton University and consultant to the Department of State. His essay in WORLD POLITICS will constitute a chapter in his forthcoming study of The Historical Role of the Economic Factor in Power Politics.

Gabriel Almond is Research Associate in the Yale Institute of International Studies and was formerly in the Office of War Information. His research in comparative politics has resulted in articles appearing in recent issues of The Political Science Quarterly and The Review of Politics.

Rupert Emerson is Professor of Government at Harvard and was formerly Director of the Division of Territories and Island Possessions, Department of the Interior. His earlier works on Southeast Asia include Malaysia, A Study in Direct and Indirect Rule and The Netherlands Indies and the United States.

Alfred Vagts is a diplomatic and military historian as well as an historian of ideas. His published works include Deutschland und die Vereinigten Staaten in der Weltpolitik and A History of Militarism.

Nathan Leites is Research Associate in Political Science at Yale and consultant on Research in Contemporary Cultures at Columbia. His research, focussing as it does on problems of interest to political scientists and social psychologists, requires the analytical skills of both disciplines.

Waldemar Gurian is Professor of Political Science at Notre Dame and Editor of The Review of Politics. In addition to four monographs, he has published articles in Foreign Affairs, The Dublin Review, and many other periodicals.

Hans Morgenthau is Associate Professor of Political Science at the University of Chicago. His most recent book is a systematic analysis of world politics entitled Politics Among Nations: The Struggle for Power and Peace.

Bryce Wood is Associate Professor of Political Science at Swarthmore College and has recently been on leave with the Social Science Division of the Rockefeller Foundation. He is the author of Peaceful Change and the Colonial Problem.

Frederick S. Dunn is Professor of International Relations at Yale and Director of its Institute of International Studies. He was formerly Executive Secretary of the Walter Hines Page School of Diplomacy at Johns Hopkins University.
