Islam and Politics in a Malay State

Kelantan 1838-1969

By CLIVES S. KESSLER. The Pan-Malayan Islamic Party (PMIP) is a little-understood political movement that exerted a major influence upon Malaysian national politics. This book describes the party's origins and defines its appeal in the state of Kelantan, where the PMIP flourished in the 1950s and 1960s. $15.00

U.S. Foreign Policy in Asia Yung-hwan Jo

An authoritative current appraisal of the U.S. role in Asia, the origins of our presence there, and its rationale, as well as the probable direction of future foreign policy. Essays and discussion from Asian specialists in political science and diplomacy represent balanced coverage. Compiled from two symposiums sponsored by the Center for Asian Studies at Arizona State University in early 1976, and spring 1977.

Robert A. Scalapino, Director of the Institute of East Asian Studies, University of California, Berkeley, says,

"Its greatest value lies in the range of opinions and issues presented, and in the combination of formal and informal presentations which give it a spontaneity and liveliness that set it apart."

May 1978. 256 pp. Hardcover $19.75

The Asian in North America Stanford M. Lyman

Distinguished scholar Stanford M. Lyman has brought together from his own articles, essays and review, 15 years of pioneering research on the Chinese and Japanese in North America. Drawing on the social experience of Asian Americans, Lyman discusses the historical importance of their immigration to this continent.

Ivan Light, Associate Professor, Department of Sociology, University of California, Los Angeles, says,

"What is most remarkable about Lyman's essays is their conjuncture of prodigious historical scholarship and bold sociological imagination. . . . This project compelled him to defend the subject from bowdlerizers, filio-pietists, ideologists and antiquarians who wanted to trivialize it. Therefore, Lyman's research is a vindication of the humanistic significance of free sociological inquiry as well as a practical lesson in how to conduct it."

The Death of Woman Wang

Jonathan D. Spence

Jonathan Spence's account of the daily dramas of rural life in seventeenth-century T'an-ch'eng makes this far-off time and place a part of our own experience. The book leads to a stunning denouement concerning a woman named Wang, who runs away from her husband and returns to him only to die at his hands. A major achievement of historical scholarship.

AUTHORITY AND THE INDIVIDUAL IN JAPAN: Citizen Protest in Historical Perspective

Edited by J. Victor Koschmann

In this volume twelve prominent Japanese scholars and critics discuss political authority in Japan and the patterns of obedience and disobedience to such authority before and since World War II. They describe how the traditional relationship between authority and the individual may be changing and ask what consequences that change may have for Japan's political development. This important collection of essays is essential reading for all students of Japanese history and society, and an introduction to Japanese political thought for the general reader interested in authority and protest in modern societies.

POST-STRUCTURAL APPROACHES TO LANGUAGE: Language Theory in a Japanese Context

J. V. Neustupný

This book develops, on the basis of the Prague School tradition, some contemporary approaches to the study of language in general and to the study of the Japanese language in particular. The author discusses, from both a theoretical and a specific data-based standpoint, indeterminacy in language, variation, and communicative competence as illustrated by Japanese honorifics. 316 pp. $9.50/£5.40 paperback

MARKETING AND FINANCE IN THE COURSE OF INDUSTRIALIZATION

Edited by Keiichiro Nakagawa

The marketing of new products and the accumulation of investment capital are two of the problems facing business enterprises in an age of industrialization and expansion. In this volume, nine prominent business historians discuss the variety of forms which corporate finance took in Japan, the United States, England, and France during the crucial years in their development as modern industrial economies.

Among the specific topics discussed by the authors are the zaibatsu of Japan and their "closed finance" system, marketing and sales financing in the U.S. automobile industry, a French engineering firm and its capital-consuming railway projects, and the introduction and diffusion of depreciation accounting in Japan. 300 pp. $29.50/£16.80

The Price of Progress in a Japanese Village, 1951–1975

Robert J. Smith. Returning in 1975 to a remote village he had first studied in 1951, the author found the quality of life there drastically altered, not only by the advent of television and modern gadgets but by the decline of the religious observances, social customs, and family relationships that had once given the village a strong sense of community. Through accounts of the histories of several families, as well as a close look at virtually all aspects of village life, the author explores the circumstances that led to these far-reaching changes, concluding with an account of a bitter 1973 dispute that split the village into antagonistic factions in a way that could not have happened twenty-five years earlier. $15.00

Women in Changing Japan

Edited by Joyce Lebra, Joy Paulson & Elizabeth Powers. “This excellent book, a series of 14 essays by 12 foreign women, seeks ‘to ascertain the degree to which women in Japan today are departing from the traditional feminine ideal—an ideal that prescribed a domestic, subordinate, and often subservient role for women.’ All of the authors are scholars and all bring to their work a rigorous discipline and a precise documentation. . . . [A] sober and illuminating book, which is both broad in scope and extremely rich in detail.”—The Japan Times. Paper, $5.95

P'Yongyang between Peking and Moscow: North Korea's Involvement in the Sino-Soviet Dispute, 1958-1975

Chin O. Chung

Professor Chung's exhaustive study of written and oral sources from North and South Korea, China, and Japan has enabled him to unravel the tangled skein of recent North Korean diplomacy. Chung describes and analyzes North Korea's relationships with the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China within the context of the bitter Sino-Soviet conflict. He demonstrates, as never before, precisely how and why the North Korean regime reacted as it did to the issues and events in Sino-Soviet relations from 1958 through 1975. $15.00

The North Korean Communist Leadership 1945-1965

Koon Woo Nam

Professor Nam traces meticulously the implacable rise of the present North Korean leadership and examines the process by which it had consolidated its rule by 1965. Kim Il-song emerges as a classically Machiavellian leader whose authoritarian regime bids fair to endure for his lifetime. Professor Nam draws on a superb range of primary and secondary sources in the Korean, Japanese, and English languages, including North Korean official publications. His epilogue brings the status of the North Korean Communist leadership up to date. $10.00

A meticulous marshalling of the evidence concerning Chinese policy developments — in effect a chronicle of the great shift from hostility to detente." — John K. Fairbank

The author, an Asian affairs analyst in the Congressional Research Service of the Library of Congress, mines the most relevant evidence from U.S. documentary sources, which have only recently become available, and the Chinese media to give a provocative and timely account of behind-the-scenes moves and motivations that will interest the generalist and specialist alike.

Economic Development of Taiwan, 1860-1970

Samuel P. S. Ho

In recent years Taiwan's economy has undergone rapid growth and dramatic structural change. This definitive statistical and analytical study describes the characteristics of the traditional economy, examines the modernization of agriculture that took place after Taiwan became a Japanese colony, and studies the post-World War II shift of the economic center of gravity from agriculture to industry. CHINESE HISTORY

Urban Change in China

Politics and Development in Tsinan, Shantung, 1890-1949

David D. Buck

Since the founding of the People's Republic of China, and particularly since 1949, scholars have placed greatest emphasis on the continuing revolution of the rural sector in China. Yet, prior to 1949, it was not the countryside but the city to which most observers, both Chinese and foreign, looked for the beginnings of China's modernization.

In these pages, Buck approaches Chinese urban history through the study of a single major city, Tsinan, the provincial capital of Shantung province. He details the history of Tsinan from the time it was primarily an administrative center in inland China through its subsequent development as a political transportation hub after 1911. He discusses the political, economic, and social life of the city and traces the impact of various changes in each of these sectors.

In nine chapters, Buck discusses chronologically the efforts made by government officials, the wealthy Chinese elite, and the foreigners to bring modernization to Tsinan.

The Crisis of Chinese Consciousness

Radical Antitraditionalism in the May Fourth Era

Lin Yü-sheng

Foreword by Benjamin Schwartz

Lin traces the origins of the concept of cultural revolution, which emerged at the turn of the century and persisted through the Maoist cultural revolutions, found in the antitraditional intellectual radicalism of the May Fourth movement. This uniquely Chinese development, he argues, is largely the result of the powerful influence of a traditional holistic mode of thinking implicitly assumed by the radical intelligentsia in the midst of its explicit complete rejection of the Chinese cultural heritage.

In explicating this thesis, he has subtly placed the ideas of Ch'en Tu-hsiu, Hu Shih and Lu Hsun — the three most celebrated leaders of the May Fourth intelligentsia — in the broader historical context of the dialectic of social and intellectual change and continuity in modern China. Lin treats these leading thinkers in great detail, to convey a sense of the intellectual unity as well as diversity of the iconoclastic movement.

Regents, Reformers, and Revolutionaries Indonesian Voices of Colonial Days

translated, edited, and annotated by Greta Oosterink Wilson

This is an anthology of nineteen selections by nine prominent Indonesian spokesmen, ranging chronologically from Pangeran Ario Hadiningrat (1847–1915) to Mohammad Hatta, Sukarno, and L.N. Palar. A short biographical sketch of each author and a helpful outline of the historical background from 1899 to 1949 enhance the reader’s understanding of the personalities and the issues of the period.

Insulinde Selected Translations from Dutch Writers of Three Centuries on the Indonesian Archipelago

edited by Cornelia Niekus Moore

In this anthology of Dutch colonial literature, the editor arranges carefully selected works in chronological order to show the progression of Dutch attitude from one of superiority to a growing appreciation of Indonesian culture despite the polarization brought on by political circumstances in the last days of the colonial period.

The point of view here is Dutch; the emphasis is the tremendous impact the colonial experience had on the totok, the Dutch newcomer to the East Indies. The accounts of these experiences are primarily autobiographic, which gives them an immediacy and fluency that easily engages the reader’s interest.
