Art Antiquity and Law

Editor-in-Chief, Professor Norman Palmer

Kluwer Law International is delighted to be publishing this important new journal, specialising in art and cultural property law. Art Antiquity and Law aims to inform those who work in art and antiquity about the law governing their activities and their policies behind the law. It is founded on the belief that cultural life cannot exist in a legal vacuum and that all responsible members of the art and history community should be aware of the role which law plays in shaping cultural policy. Above all, Art Antiquity and Law is designed to help its readers assimilate the mass of legal regulation within the field, and be prepared to respond to it.

The quarterly gives an account of new legislation, case-law, public documents and official initiatives, and gives considered opinions on more general points of law and practice. Art Antiquity and Law is aimed at legal practitioners and non-lawyers who have a particular experience of applying or reforming the law. The journal is published under the auspices of the Institute of Art and Law based in Leicester, and under the general editorship of Professor Norman Palmer, a noted authority on the interrelation of history, art and law.

This journal will be of great importance to legal practitioners, university lawyers, fund managers, insurers and loss adjusters, tax advisers, investors, collectors, auction houses, market consultants, archaeologists, developers, anthropologists, local authorities, museum officers, art historians, owners of historical properties and cultural policy advisers.
