FISHING FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES

By WILLIAM RADCLIFFE

SOMETIME OF BALLIOL COLLEGE, OXFORD

DR. J. W. MACKAIL in a letter in
"The Times Literary Supplement" says:

"Perhaps I may say that when I was translating the 'Odyssey' myself I came to the conclusion, with some doubt, that the harpoon was meant, the ox-horn being the detachable horn tip of the lance, and rendered the passage accordingly. But after studying the careful and scholarly discussion of the whole matter in Mr. Radcliffe's book I incline to think that I was wrong. It is far from being the only instance in which by applying care, common sense and expert knowledge, Mr. Radcliffe has thrown valuable light on the classics. His book will, I think, be in some sense a classic itself; it ought to be in every scholar's as well as in every angler's library."

Of this volume 264 pages are devoted to Greek and Roman Fishing from Homer to Ausonius. The Author treats of its methods, superstitions, taboos, laws, medicine, folk-lore, gods. He makes several original points, e.g., the establishment of Aristotle as the first reader of the ages of fish by their scales and the (probable) use of the artificial fly centuries before Ælian described it.

A handsome volume, artistically bound,
with numerous illustrations. 28/- net.
