LATIN AMERICA, THE COLD WAR, AND THE WORLD POWERS, 1945- 1973: A Study in Diplomatic History

by F. PARKINSON, Law, University College (London)

"After so many U.S. monographs in which facts are sloppily presented and professional jargon replaces scholarly craftsmanship, it is a pleasure to read a text which is coldly lucid, with each statement carefully documented and with an ample bibliography. In preparing his monograph, Parkinson not only scoured the literature, he toured Latin America in search of new insights and information. The result is a work which opens up the whole field of what might be called Latin American diplomacy."

GUARDIANS OF THE DYNASTY

A History of the U.S. Created Guardia Nacional de Nicaragua and the Somoza Family

by Richard Millett

Introduction by Miguel d'Escoto, M.M.

The history of Nicaragua is perhaps the saddest history of any country in continental Latin America. Unfortunately, U.S. interference in Nicaraguan political problems is one of the main factors that have brought about this sad history. Guardians of the Dynasty is the long-awaited story of the institution most responsible for maintaining in power the longest-lasting dictatorship in Latin America. It provides ample and irrefutable evidence to demonstrate the corrupt and oppressive nature of the Somoza dynasty and the total bankruptcy of Washington's Nicaragua policy.

NEW SAGE PAPERS ON LATIN AMERICA

$ 3.00 each

- THE IMPACT OF REVOLUTION: A Comparative Analysis of Mexico and Bolivia by Susan Eckstein (06-016)

An analysis of economic and political developments in two Latin American countries which have undergone "capitalist revolutions," where outcomes are shown to be shaped more by international economic and political forces and by the use of state power than by the conditions inducing "popular" forces to rebel.

- TERRORISM IN LATIN AMERICA by Ernst Halperin (480033)

Analyzing the strategy, tactics, social origins, and ideology of terrorism, this paper declares that it is "a vigorous reaction against economic stagnation and social putrefaction" by the most energetic members of the young, educated class—a bid for power and simultaneously a bid for employment.

- A COMPARISON OF U.S. AND MULTILATERAL AID RECIPIENTS IN LATIN AMERICA, 1957-1971 by William Loehr, David Price, and Satish Raichur (02-040)

Contrasting the two types of aid—bilateral and multilateral—and considering the characteristics of the recipients of each, this paper isolates those political and economic factors that characterize the donor-recipient relationship in Latin America.

- REGIONAL INTEGRATION: A Comparison of European and Central American Dynamics by Louis A. McCall (02-041)

Are the dynamics of integration the same from region to region? This paper applies multivariate techniques to the study of regional integration—addressing the problem within the context of a causally determined axiomatic theory—derived from an empirical assessment of the European and Central American experiences.

- URBANIZATION AND POLITICS by John Peeler (01-062)

A comparative study of political change in Colombia and Venezuela since independence, this paper highlights the specific character of the politics and the culture in which each capital city is immersed, sketching the effects of these factors on modernization and urbanization of each society.

- CUBAN ECONOMIC POLICY AND IDEOLOGY: The Ten Million Ton Sugar Harvest by Sergio Roca (02-044)

A detailed examination of the failure of the ten million ton harvest and the various factors which caused and defined that failure—particularly the concurrent output losses in non-sugar sectors of the economy—this paper speculates on the extent to which the ideological tenets of the Moral Economy contributed to the final outcome.

MIGRATION AND ADAPTATION:

Tzintzuntzan Peasants in Mexico City

by ROBERT V. KEMPER, Anthropology, Southern Methodist University

A new study presenting a description and analysis of rural migrants and their adaptation to life in a rapidly growing metropolitan setting, this volume deals with a microcosm of Mexican urbanization: emigration from the traditional peasant village of Tzintzuntzan, Michoacán to Mexico City. Professor Kemper reports on the background of the migrants as well as on their cultural and social adjustments to an urban environment. A model of rural-urban migration applicable to similar populations in other developing nations is also presented and will be of interest to anthropologists and urban specialists involved in a variety of disciplines.

CONTENTS

Preface

Part I. Rural Background

1. The Modernization of Tzintzuntzan

2. Emigration from Tzintzuntzan

Part II. The Urban Setting

3. Mexico City as Destination

4. The Migrants: Population and Mobility

"Tzintzuntzan is especially well suited for a microcosmic study of the emigration process. On the one hand, since the bulk of the emigration is recent, we can deal with real people, and not simply with statistics. And these people are known, as are their families, their socioeconomic status, and their histories, to an extent not normally the case."

JOURNAL OF URBAN HISTORY

Editor:

BLAINE A. BROWNELL, Urban Affairs, University of Alabama in Birmingham

The JOURNAL OF URBAN HISTORY provides an international forum for new research and interpretation focused on what Roy Lubove once defined as "the process of city building over time."

The JOURNAL views the field inclusively. It is concerned with the history of cities and urban societies in all periods of history and in all geographical areas of the world. The JOURNAL is receptive to diverse methodologies, approaches, and points of view. Editorial criteria are based primarily upon considerations of scope, focus, and coverage.

The JOURNAL encourages the submission of manuscripts that are innovative, wide-ranging, cross-cultural, and interdisciplinary. The editors seek material that is analytical or interpretive, rather than purely descriptive, and tend strongly toward studies that focus on process and structure. Studies of small or narrow urban experience—or "case studies" of individual cities—will also be considered if they clearly and strongly relate to a broader context or offer new and significant interpretations.
