How to Prevent Genocide

A Guide for Policymakers, Scholars, and the Concerned Citizen

By John G. Heidenrich

Assesses ways that policy makers, the media, academics, and concerned citizens can work to prevent genocide.

"In the vast literature on ethnic and religious massacres, Heiderich's book is distinguished both by its sense of moral urgency and by the realism of its evaluation of what can be done to prevent genocide. He has no illusions about the obstacles, yet he presents a convincing set of proposals for early warnings, non-violent pressures, and an international league of volunteers. This is a strong and moving call for awareness, concern, and action."

Legalization and World Politics

edited by Judith L. Goldstein, Miles Kahler,
Robert O. Keohane, and Anne-Marie Slaughter

In recent years, international law has become more relevant to world politics as rules have become more precise and obligatory and the delegation of dispute resolution to third parties more frequent. Political scientists have done significant work on international institutions, and international legal scholars have developed politically sophisticated ways of examining the law. In Legalization and World Politics, well-known political scientists and legal scholars offer a joint exploration of changes both in the world and in the two disciplines.

Judith L. Goldstein is Professor of Political Science at Stanford University. Miles Kahler is J. Rohr Professor of Pacific International Relations in the Graduate School of International Relations and Pacific Studies at the University of California, San Diego. Robert O. Keohane is James B. Duke Professor of Political Science at Duke University and a former editor of International Organization. Anne-Marie Slaughter is J. Sinclair Armstrong Professor of International, Foreign, and Comparative Law and Director of Graduate and International Legal Studies at Harvard Law School.
