Manuscripts

The China Quarterly welcomes the submission of manuscripts from all scholars, including research students, on all aspects of contemporary China and from all points of view, including those which deal with Taiwan and Overseas Chinese. Articles on China prior to 1949 are also welcome, particularly, but not exclusively, when these relate directly to contemporary China or to the history of the Chinese Communist Party. Articles should be submitted, in triplicate, to the editorial office. They should be typed in double spacing and, preferably, conform to the styling of The China Quarterly.

The China Quarterly is published by the Contemporary China Institute of the School of Oriental and African Studies, London University. The views expressed in articles are those of individual authors and do not necessarily represent the views of the Contemporary China Institute.

Communist Affairs aims at filling a major gap in the literature on contemporary communism. It is devoted to documents from original sources, namely from the Communist and Workers' Parties, groups, organisations and institutions (which identify themselves as such), and from revolutionary nationalist movements closely related to them. The documents are selected for publication on the basis of their major ideological, internal, international and presumed historical significance.

The journal thus fulfils the following functions: (1) It provides primary source material for advanced research; (2) it does this by presenting a documentary record of the evolution of the contemporary communist movement and of the inter-relationships within that movement at a time when it is marked by great, and increasing, diversity. The record covers the affairs of both ruling and non-ruling Marxist-Leninist parties, in the former case documenting not only governmental policies but also voices of opposition and dissent which those policies at times engender; and in the latter case tracing the fortunes of non-ruling parties within the political life of their respective nations; and, (3) it includes articles which analyse and interpret the documents.
