Can the Internet Cause Harm?

Alex Jadad and Miguel Villasis are conducting a systematic search of the biomedical peer-reviewed literature on the Internet for articles with data on harm caused by the use of information found on the Internet by members of the public. They have found many articles warning about potential problems, but have not located any supporting evidence. If you know of any paper or web site with data on this topic, please contact them at villasm@mcmaster.ca.

Health Care Quality Special Interest Group

The recently formed Health Care Quality (HCQ) Special Interest Group (SIG), sponsored by the American Society for Quality's Health Care Division and SHEA, has over 40 members worldwide. By e-mail, SIG members described their interests in health-care quality improvement (QI) and then developed, debated, and ratified seven goals with eight subordinate objectives. Also via e-mail, volunteer working parties considered each objective in detail and began taking action.

SIG invites you to participate in the inaugural symposium, "Collaborations to Improve Health Care Quality," which will be held in conjunction with SHEA's annual meeting in Toronto, Ontario, Canada, in April. Participants will be informed of progress, plans for collaborative initiatives, new funding, and applied research programs, and provided an opportunity for networking.

Interested in joining the HCQ-SIG? Please contact David Birnbaum, brnbaum@interchange.ubc.ca.
