XXIX. a. North side of the Divinity School and Duke Humphrey's Library: the buttresses are panelled for the first three stages. b. East elevation of Arts End (1610–13), showing Proscholium door, with window and panelled wall modelled on fifteenth-century features of the Divinity School.	} following 156
XXX. a. South side of the Divinity School before restoration, showing decayed state of Sir Christopher Wren's extensions to the buttresses. b. North side of the Divinity School under repair. Reinforced uprights are being inserted into the buttresses.
XXXI. a. South window reveal of the Divinity School, showing contrast between the elaborate mouldings of Richard Winchcombe (before 1439) and the simpler work of Thomas Elkyn (1439–49). b. Relation of Divinity School window to the springing of the vault.
XXXII. Interior of East wall of the Divinity School showing Richard Winchcombe's door (before 1439), and lateral windows remodelled in blind to fit William Orchard's vault (about 1480).
XXXIII. Duke Humphrey's Library, showing the trussed beams of Galton's floor (1877) sagging from the horizontal on to the Divinity School vault. The flat arches of the vault carried the original library floor.
XXXIV. Duke Humphrey's Library, looking east: after insertion of new floor and before return of Bodley's furniture.
XXXV. a. Nineteenth-century heating ducts cut through the floor timbers of Selden End. b. The vaulted ceiling of the Convocation House (1758–9).
XXXVI. Lower part of west door to the Divinity School revealed after removal of seventeenth-century seating in the Convocation House. The elaborate detail shows that the doorway may belong to the earlier phase of the building (before 1439).
XXXVII. Broken state of the Selden End arch, revealed after removal of its panelling (shown in Plate XXXIII).
XXXVIII. a. West side of Selden End under repair. Recess of blocked window is being adapted to take new stair to gallery. b. East door to the Divinity School with adjacent fifteenth-century window and panelling partly covered by Bodley's walling and a vaulting shaft of the Proscholium.
