

Editorial

Changes are afoot in the editorial office. I took early retirement from my tenured professorship at Saint Louis University last summer and have returned to the UK, my ancestral home, where I am enjoying reacquainting myself with the culture. Hence, the Deputy Editor, Rob Howard, and I are virtual neighbors.

There has been another important change. We have had to say goodbye to our Editorial Assistant, Nancy Raley, who has had a promotion at her full-time place of work. Nancy has worked unstintingly for the journal almost since I became Editor-in-Chief in 1995. We have been through all the changes in the journal together and have always done what we thought was right for it, making it, we believe, into a much better product; at least, so our friends and relatives tell us. So farewell Nancy, a lovely lady, and good luck with your continuing career in the publishing business.

Our new, UK-based Editorial Assistant, Judith Sylph, also has a background in publishing and editing, has an honors degree in English from Oxford, and has considerable experience in psychiatric research in world-class centers on both sides of the Atlantic. She is located in Cambridge, UK, so the entire editorial office will be in one country, which should make management much easier.

To maintain continuity, it has been decided to update the submissions procedures for the journal. All authors are urged, if at all possible, to make their submissions via e-mail, or failing this, on a diskette. These should be addressed to the Chicago office, where they will be logged and transferred immediately via e-mail to the editorial office in Cambridge, UK, where all editing activities will be carried out. In addition, the International Psychogeriatric Association offices in Chicago and Cambridge are in the process of developing a web page for the journal that will enhance communications and expedite all journal business.
