LEGAL PROBLEMS OF INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

Felice Morgenstern, C.B.E.

formerly Deputy Legal Adviser of the International Labour Organisation

An examination of some of the principal legal issues of modern international organization as seen by an author with outstanding practical experience in the subject. The depth, practicality and range of this study makes it essential reading for all who are concerned with the law and operation of international institutions.

RECOGNITION AND THE UNITED NATIONS

John Dugard, LL.D. (Cantab.)

Director of the Centre of Applied Legal Studies
University of Witwatersrand

Recognition – a central and controversial topic of international law – has traditionally been a matter for unilateral decision by States. In recent years, however, collective decision-making within the United Nations, by way of admission of Members or resolutions calling for non-recognition, has assumed increasing prominence. This development – and the associated application of the concepts of peremptory norms of international law and ius cogens – are examined in this book, drawing for the first time upon a significant body of United Nations practice.
