

Notes on Contributors

Leslie Stevenson

Reader in Logic and Metaphysics at the University of St Andrews. He is author of Ten Theories of Human Nature (Third Edition, 1998), The Many Faces of Science (1995), and The Metaphysics of Experience (1982).

Laurence Goldstein

Professor of Philosophy at the University of Wales, Swansea. His recent book, Clear and Queer Thinking: The Development of Wittgenstein's Thought (1999), provides a much broader and somewhat more measured appraisal of Wittgenstein's work than does the play presented here.

Gordon Lyon

Teaches philosophy at Florida State University. His article, 'The Experience of Perceptual Familiarity' was published in Philosophy in January, 1996.

Jonathan Jacobs

Associate Professor of Philosophy at Colgate University. He has been John MacMurray Visiting Professor at the University of Edinburgh, Visiting Fellow at Clare Hall, and Visiting Senior Member of Linacre College. He is author of articles in Monist, Ratio, Review of Metaphysics and other journals. His most recent book is Practical Realism and Moral Psychology.

Glenn A. Hartz

Associate Professor of Philosophy at Ohio State University. He has published articles on Leibniz, virtue ethics, and the emotions. He is the Editor of The Leibniz Review.

Quentin Smith

Professor of Philosophy at Western Michigan University, some of whose recent books include Ethical and Religious Thought in Analytical Philosophy of Language (Yale, 1997), Language and Time (Oxford, 1993), and four chapters of The New Theory of Reference: Kripke, Marcus and its Origins, edited by P. Humphreys and J. Fetzer (Kluwer, 1998). His earlier contributions to Philosophy were 'Simplicity and Why the Universe Exists' (January, 1997) and 'Concerning the Absurdity of Life' (January, 1991).

Graham Bird

Has been Professor of Philosophy at Stirling and Manchester Universities, and is currently President of the UK Kant Society. He is writing a commentary on Kant's first Critique.

Notes on Contributors

Nigel Walker

Formerly Director of the Institute of Criminology, and a Fellow of King's College, at Cambridge. His latest book is Aggravation, Mitigation and Mercy (Blackstone Press, 1999).