Dutch Calvinism in Modern America

A History of a Conservative Subculture

James D. Bratt

"In this study Bratt has elevated the genre of denominational history to a high plane of scholarship....Bratt brilliantly traces the development of the remarkable religious and cultural outlook that united Dutch Calvinists in the New World.... A fine chapter on four Dutch-American novelists adds to the richness of the study. Bratt writes well, and often wittily. His affectionate engagement with his refractory subjects engages the reader as well." —Library Journal

"Knowledgeable, sophisticated, and socially aware. ... The author has a gift for summing up trends, issues, and events in brief and lucid statements.... Bratt has an insider's knowledge of his subject, but he has managed to gain enough distance for penetrating criticism."

Holy Apostles? Greedy Colonialists?... or Neither?

Western Missionary Attitudes in the "High Imperial Era" are assessed in these papers from the Durham (UK) Colloquium, 1981, of the International Commission for Comparative Church History.

"We see the old missionary apologies fade from view... Now is the time to review the single-mindedness of missionaries as converters, and their astonishing varieties so far as the 'imperialism' question is concerned. They get a rare fair hearing here."

Christian Century

"This book marks a watershed in missionary scholarship, and all those concerned with the subject cannot now proceed much further without paying attention to the reports and conclusions contained therein."

*Lamin Sanneh
Center for World
Religions, Harvard*

The essays, dealing principally with Protestant examples, explore: German missionary thinking (Gerhard Besier, Jonas Dah, Johanna Eggert, Hans-Werner Gensichen, Winfried Glier, Karl Rennstich, Hans Waldenfels); Scandinavian missions (Nils Bloch-Hoell, Torben Christensen, Carl Hallencreutz, Lars Österlin); Anglo-American ideologies (Holger Hansen, William Hutchison, Clifton Phillips, Andrew Walls, John Webster); women's influence (Shirley Garrett, Louise Pirouet); and the multi-national experience in South Africa and New Guinea (Norman Etherington, Charles Forman).

HISTORY AND HISTORICAL UNDERSTANDING

EDITED BY C. T. McINTIRE
AND RONALD A. WELLS

“This fine collection of essays more than fulfills the intent of its editors to contribute to the ongoing discussion of history and its meaning. The essays, though diverse in other ways, all successfully bring the ‘insights’ of Christian faith to bear on questions concerning the nature of history, the Christian stake in history, and the relationship of historical method to faith.”

— MARK A. NOLL
Wheaton College

“This book makes an important contribution to the ongoing conversation about history. The contributors include outstanding church historians and Christian historians of secular history. Some of the essays rise to the level of brilliance, and all offer insights of great value to professional historians, philosophers of history, and to the many students of history fascinated by the questions that occur to any serious inquiring mind.”

How Christianity helped lead America into the sexual revolution

The first book to explain how the sexual revolution could have occurred in a nation so deeply imbued with Christian ethical values. Tracing our strange journey from the hands of Jonathan Edwards' angry Puritan God to the loving embrace of Marabel Morgan's Total Woman, Gardella draws his surprising evidence from widely disparate sources, ranging from Catholic confessionals to Methodist revival meetings, from evangelical romances to The Song of Bernadette.

"Informative, provocative, persuasive, and entertaining."
