

THE DICTIONARY OF ORIENTAL LITERATURES

Edited by Jaroslav Prusek
Director, Oriental Institute, Prague

"An indispensable reference for all institutions and individuals concerned with Oriental studies."*

Here, at last, is the first comprehensive account of the rich and varied literatures of Asia and North Africa. In these beautifully designed volumes—containing more than 2,000 individual entries—the efforts of over 150 Orientalists from all over the world have produced a truly definitive dictionary.

"A wide-ranging, authoritative reference . . . undoubtedly will become the general source of information on Asian and North African authors—ancient and modern—on anonymous works and on literary terms."—Alex Preminger, Editor, The Princeton Encyclopedia of Poetry and Poetics. "Excellent . . . the entries range from clear and succinct statements of fact to highly perceptive and original comments and assessments."—Dr. D. W. Archer*, Keeper Emeritus, Indian Section, The Victoria and Albert Museum. Just published.

Is history repeating itself in China?

Current reports out of China suggest that a new "cultural revolution" is brewing. If you want to know how to read the signs of 1974, this insightful book about the events of 1956 will prove a prophetic guide.

This is the first study to make use of hitherto secret Mao speeches which became available in 1973, and which greatly illuminate his role and his purposes in launching the cultural revolution. To understand the tactics which Mao may be using again against his political foes, you must read this impressive work.

The Speaking Tree

A Study of Indian Culture and Society

RICHARD LANNOY. □ "There is much vivid and enthusiastic writing in this volume; the selection of fifty-six plates includes some excellent and rarely seen choices, and the volume is well-indexed and contains an extensive bibliography."—Journal of Asian Studies. "Lannoy discusses Indian art, society, values, religion, and family; but no enumeration of topics can convey the interest of this ambitious attempt at a synoptic understanding of Indian culture. A remarkably subtle and thought-provoking work."—Foreign Affairs

Silent China

Selected Writings of Lu Xun

Edited and translated by GLADYS YANG. □ Lu Xun (1881-1936), one of modern China's greatest writers, was a champion of revolutionary political causes and wrote in the vernacular rather than classical Chinese. This well-known translator has made a comprehensive selection from the whole range of Lu Xun's writings—thirty-five stories, reminiscences, poems, and essays—that will give the readers the flavor of the man—his versatility, candor, rueful wit, and courage—as well as an insight into the "silent China" that he writes about.

Some Sayings of the Buddha

Translated by F. L. WOODWARD; with an introduction by CHRISTMAS HUMPHREYS. □ This volume is the only edition in English of the Pali Canon basic text, the kernal of Buddhist thought. The Canon represents the extensive literature from the Scriptures of the Theravada—"Teaching of the Elders"—school of Buddhism. Included in the introduction is a sensitive sketch of the life of Buddha, his teachings, and the spread of Buddhism in the West.

R. C. ZAEHNER. □ Of the sacred books of the Hindus, the Bhagavad-Gītā is the most widely read and probably the most important text for the understanding of Eastern mysticism. In the introduction Professor Zaehner expounds the main concepts involved in the Gītā. A translation follows accompanied by subtitles, the Sanskrit original text in transliteration, and a commentary. Finally, an appendix includes the main topics discussed, arranged under subject headings.

The China Reader IV: People's China

Social Experimentation, Politics, Entry onto the World Scene, 1966 through 1972

Edited by David Milton, Nancy Milton, and Franz Schurmann. The latest volume in the highly praised "China Reader" series, this is a documentary history of China from the onset of the Cultural Revolution to the country's emergence as a major world power. Among the political leaders, literary men, scholars, and journalists contributing to the volume are Anna Louise Strong, Joan Robinson, Mao Tse-tung, Louis Kraar, James Reston, Joseph Alsop, and Edgar Snow. $15 hardcover; Vintage paperback $3.95

A History of the Chinese Cultural Revolution

By Jean Daubier, translated by Richard Seaver, with a preface by Han Suyin. A French Marxist who participated in the Revolution presents an eye-witness account of the events, and examines their meaning for other Marxist regimes. "The first book on the Cultural Revolution to take the ideology behind it seriously . . . [Daubier's] own personal experience of the Cultural Revolution adds an extra dimension to the records."

Medieval Japan

Essays in Institutional History

John W. Hall and Jeffrey P. Mass, editors

The view of medieval Japan that emerges from this pioneering collection is a much more diverse and energetic one than ordinarily portrayed. The authors present new analytical insights and expand our knowledge of the political structure of the Heian court, of the interests behind the creation of the Kamakura military government and their modification under the Muromachi regime, and of the evolution of the land-tax systems which underlay the political structure.

"These essays chart new and promising lines of research and add important dimensions to our knowledge of medieval Japanese history."—Marius B. Jansen $12.50

Treasures Among Men

The Fudai Daimyo in Tokugawa Japan

Harold Bolitho

By the middle of the seventeenth century, the Tokugawa Bakufu (shogunate) seemed well on the way to achieving centralized control of Japan. Why did it subsequently weaken and fall? Mr. Bolitho breaks with tradition and analyzes this question by focusing on the fudai daimyo. Disputing the conventional portrayal of these men as paragons of fealty to the shogun, he describes the competing claims upon their loyalty and their self-interest. In the final years of conflict that led to the Meiji Restoration they refused to jeopardize their positions by fighting for the Tokugawa house that had raised them up nearly three centuries before. $12.50

MICROFILM COLLECTION RUSSIAN PUBLICATIONS ON JAPAN

Japanologists have long been hoping that the extensive materials concerning this country in the U.S.S.R. would one day be offered to the public. Our company has successfully completed a comprehensive integration of microfilms of tsarist and Soviet Russian manuscripts and publications on Japan stretching over a period of three centuries, from 1734 to 1958. This epoch-making enterprise, needless to say, will not only add a new page to research on Russo-Japanese relations but will also make important contributions to various other fields.

Based on the Bibliografija Japonii (2 vols.) published in Moscow in 1960 and 1965, the collection comprises:

- a) Books, articles, periodicals, journals, theses, official records and documents, memoranda and statistics in full, as they appear in the original.
- b) Abstracts from such publications as the above.
- c) Russian translations of foreign publications on Japan.
- d) Criticisms and commentaries of foreign publications not translated into Russian.
- e) Manuscripts revised by specialists.
- f) Related materials abstracted from publications not dealing directly with Japan.

However, the collection does not include newspaper reports, unpublished theses, or a few materials of which the age of the originals makes them impossible to photograph. For maximum convenience, the Bibliografija has been used as an index to the whole edition.

ARRANGEMENT OF THE MICROFILM

- a) Specifications: 35mm negative film.
- b) For convenient indexing, the appropriate code numbers used in the Bibliografija are printed in the frame preceding each title.
- c) In the case of material selected from periodicals, theses, statutes, treaties, etc., the front cover of the original volume is printed in the frame directly after the code number.

The first category to be put on sale will be Foreign Policy (1724—1917).

VILLAGE LIFE IN SOUTH INDIA: Cultural Design and Environmental Variation

ALAN R. BEALS, University of California, Riverside

Over the past 2,000 years South Indian civilization has undergone constant change and modification. But the South Indian village has maintained its basic character, adjusting to a variety of environments and countless conquests yet always adhering to a world view that pictures the entire universe as a harmonious entity. Professor Beals describes the South Indian world view; the close relationship among human beings, grain crops and cattle; the settlement patterns and social structures that characterize village life; the agricultural technology and ecology; the techniques of population regulation that have traditionally operated to maintain appropriate man-to-land ratios; the relationships among villages; religious rituals and institutions; the relationship between the villages and the increasingly powerful Indian government; and the new ecology resulting from modernization. In a final chapter he weaves together all these varied aspects and themes into a description of the seamless web of relationships that have preserved this successful adaptation of man for many centuries.

CHINESE LITERATURE: Popular Fiction and Drama

H.C. CHANG, Wolfson College, Cambridge

"There is no richer anthology of Chinese vernacular literature in English translation now on the market. Judging by the uniform excellence of the translations, I would predict that if Dr. Chang continues in this line of endeavor he should in a matter of years win general recognition as the foremost translator of Chinese vernacular literature in our time. But Dr. Chang is also a sensitive critic and erudite scholar: each of the selections is prefaced by a long essay containing copious background information for the proper appreciation of that selection in its cultural context. The twelve essays, together with the General Introduction, constitute in themselves an impressive guide to the major genres and works of Chinese fiction and drama."—C.T. Hsia, Professor of Chinese, Columbia University

This book illustrates the art of the Chinese story-teller—the bards, flute players, singers, mummeters and actors who entranced the audiences that crowded the fair grounds and stages of Chinese cities from the Southern Sung (c. 1100 AD) onward. The twelve stories and scenes from plays—many of them heretofore untranslated—are brilliantly translated by a Chinese scholar whose narrative skill matches that of his subjects.

China's Population Struggle

Demographic Decisions of the People's Republic, 1949-1969

By H. Yuan Tien. A study of China's massive effort, in the face of horrendous difficulties, to provide basic subsistence to its enormous and growing population and to use its people efficiently in the furtherance of national goals, which effectively refutes the notion that China is a backward nation of impoverished citizens destined for demographic bankruptcy. Tables, appendix, Bibliography, Index. $15.00

Dynamics of the Vietnam War

A Quantitative Analysis and Predictive Computer Simulation

By Jeffrey Milstein. A skillful extraction from the public and private statements of those officials of the government responsible for the conduct of the Vietnam War of the theories or models they constructed to decide and explain their actions, which, utilized in conjunction with an impressive body of research data, permit establishment of empirically valid relationships between military actions and their political consequences. MODERN JAPANESE

AN ADVANCED READER

by

GEN ITASAKA

lecturer on Japanese language and literature, Harvard University

Created especially for those who have completed Hibbett-Itasaka's "Modern Japanese: A Basic Reader" and wish to further their knowledge of Japanese, this new advanced reader is based on a series of 30 extracts from books, essays and articles written mainly during the 1960s by leading Japanese scholars, critics and novelists. The diversified content, featuring articles on politics, economics, history, sociology, anthropology and literature, makes the set valuable for students of Japanese culture as well as language. Each selection is accompanied by a comprehensive word list and grammatical explanations. Tested for three years in American colleges, "Modern Japanese: An Advanced Reader" fills a long-existing need both as a classroom text and for independent study. Two volumes, $15.00 the set.

A new edition—

POEMS FROM KOREA

A Historical Anthology

translated and edited by Peter H. Lee

A collection of 120 poems covering a period of 1300 years, from “Song of Mattung” (600 A.D.) to the contemporary works of Cho Pyŏng-hwa, the most popular modern poet in Korea.

This volume, a revised edition of the 1964 publication Anthology of Korean Poetry, has been brought up to date to reflect the most recent scholarship. Authorship of some poems has been redetermined, some dates have changed, and some textual ambiguities have been clarified. It is published as part of the UNESCO Collection of Representative Works, Korean Translation Series.

“Mr. Lee is to be congratulated upon an achievement doubly rare: for translating so beautifully out of his own language, and for doing what few are ever blest with the opportunity of doing—making the poetic literature of a whole national tradition accessible for the first time to the millions of people who read English.”—Earl Miner in Orient/West (review of original edition)
