

No Precedent, No Plan

Inside Russia's 1998 Default

Martin Gilman

"Those who have a stereotypical view of what has happened in Russia since the collapse of the USSR will take no comfort from reading No Precedent, No Plan. Drawing on a unique combination of experience and expertise, Martin Gilman convincingly proves that 'the reality is more complex, and perhaps more troubling.' By putting the story of Russia's struggle for a market economy in broader international and historical context, he makes an invaluable contribution to our view of these critical years in Russia." — Fyodor Lukyanov, editor, Russia in Global Affairs

Cinematic Cold War

The American and Soviet Struggle for Hearts and Minds

Tony Shaw and Denise J. Youngblood

“While the two superpowers were stocking up their nuclear arsenals during the Cold War, the film industries in both countries were confronting their respective viewers with the ‘face of the enemy.’ In this book, the enemies come face to face. The authors, for the first time, provide the reader with a balanced and rigorously researched picture of the propaganda war that was fought on screen and contribute to a deeper understanding of a crucial, and still enigmatic, period in our recent history.”—Anna Lawton, author of Imaging Russia 2000: Film and Facts

“An important book by the two most knowledgeable people in the field of Soviet and American cold war films.”—Peter Kenez, author of Cinema and Soviet Society: From the Revolution to the Death of Stalin

Russian War Films

On the Cinema Front, 1914–2005

Denise J. Youngblood

“A beautifully written, carefully conceived, and meticulously researched study that will leave readers with new insights into films with which they are already familiar, a strong desire to see many others, and a rich and complex picture of Russian film art. More than that, it is a pioneering work in the young field of Russian history on film.”—Slavic Review

Writers at Work

Russian Production Novels and the Construction of Soviet Culture

Mary A. Nicholas

Recent research on the Soviet period of Russian literary history has eliminated many gaps in our understanding of that complex era. With few exceptions, however, little critical attention has been directed to the most important of all Soviet genres: the production novel, or proizvodstvennyi roman. Such neglect is particularly true of production novels written in the transitional era between the late 1920s and the early 1930s. Such works provide an essential but still misunderstood clue to the Stalinist era and the formation of Soviet culture. Based on contemporary theory and new archival research, Writers at Work re-assesses the production novel and re-interprets its importance in the development of Stalinism. The author uses both well-known and long-forgotten examples of the production novel to explore the essential role this unique genre played in the construction of Soviet culture.
