Journal of the Society for American Music

Journal of the Society for American Music (JSAM) is an international, peer-reviewed journal that explores all aspects of American music and music in the Americas. JSAM is dedicated to supporting scholarship that transcends disciplinary boundaries, cutting across historical musicology, music theory, ethnomusicology, cultural theory, and American studies. JSAM encourages international dialogue across disciplines. The journal features articles, reviews of books, recordings, and multimedia items, and explorations of special topics.

Contributors

Gene H. Anderson is a professor of music at the University of Richmond, Virginia. Since 1982, he has served as director of bands, instructor of music theory, and for many years as department chair. He has published numerous articles on early jazz and music analysis, which have appeared in American Music, College Music Symposium, and other journals, along with a book, The Original Hot Five Recordings of Louis Armstrong (2007). He holds a Ph.D. from the University of Iowa.

Tim J. Anderson is an associate professor of communication and theatre arts at Old Dominion University. Among his publications are two monographs, Making Easy Listening: Material Culture and Postwar American Recording (University of Minnesota Press, 2006) and Popular Music in a Digital Music Economy: Problems and Practices for an Emerging Service Industry (Routledge, 2014). His latest research project focuses on recordings, musicians, listeners, and the public sphere.

Navid Bargrizan is a Ph.D. candidate in historical musicology at the University of Florida. He has presented papers on intersections of music, technology, and philosophy in the music of Harry Partch, Manfred Stahnke, and Mozart at national and international conferences, such as the Society for American Music and the German Studies Association. His articles, interviews, and papers are published in Müzik-Bilim Dergisi, Journal of Musicology, Newsletter of the Society of Composers, Inc., and proceedings of conferences in Berlin and Istanbul.

Paula J. Bishop received her Ph.D. in musicology from Boston University in 2011. Her dissertation examined the life and work of the Everly Brothers, the first successful duo of the rock 'n' roll era. She has written on the music of Hawai'i, shape-note practices in the United States, and the role of television in early rock 'n' roll. She is currently an assistant professor in the music department at Bridgewater State University in Massachusetts.

Gregory Camp is a lecturer in music at the University of Auckland, where he teaches musicology and music theory and serves as artistic director of the university's opera training program. He completed his doctoral research at Oxford University in 2012, working on the twentieth-century performance and reception history of Claudio Monteverdi's operas. His current research centers on music and characterization in film.

Judah M. Cohen is the Lou and Sybil Mervis Professor of Jewish Culture and an associate professor of musicology at Indiana University, Bloomington. He has authored The Making of a Reform Jewish Cantor: Musical Authority, Cultural Investment and Sounding Jewish Tradition: The Music of Central Synagogue. His current projects explore World War II–era narratives in musical theater, nineteenth-century American synagogue music, and American Jewish singer, songwriter, and liturgist Debbie Friedman.

Maya C. Gibson is an assistant professor of musicology at the University of Missouri, Columbia. She is currently at work on an interdisciplinary, book-length monograph on the jazz vocalist Billie Holiday.

Larry Hamberlin is an associate professor of music at Middlebury College. He is the author of Tin Pan Opera (2011) and, with Richard Crawford, the textbook An Introduction to America's Music (2nd ed., 2014). His articles on American popular song have appeared in the Journal of the American Musicological Society, American Music, and the Enzyklopädie jüdischer Geschichte und Kultur.

Hannah Lewis is an assistant professor of musicology at the University of Texas at Austin. Her research focuses on American and European film music of the 1920s and 1930s. She is currently writing a book on music in French cinema during the transition to synchronized sound.

Fumi Okiji is the Black Arts Postdoctoral Fellow at Northwestern University. Her research focuses on the black radical tradition, particularly on how expressive work can provide alternative forms of knowledge and models for progressive social organization. These themes are explored in her forthcoming book on jazz, Theodor Adorno, and the critical potential of the arts. Her current work is an interdisciplinary meditation on the “wounded kinship” of the black Atlantic.

Eric Smigel is an associate professor of music at San Diego State University, where he coordinates the musicology program and teaches courses in music history, music research, and a general education course in psychedelic rock of the 1960s. He is currently writing a biography of American composer James Tenney to be published by the University of Illinois Press.

Jonas Westover is a musicologist who teaches a wide variety of music history courses at several colleges in the Twin Cities of Minnesota. His newest work is The Shuberts and Their Passing Shows: The Untold Tale of Ziegfeld's Rivals (Oxford University Press, 2016). He is also an orchestral conductor and will lead the only centennial performance of Sigmund Romberg and Harold Atteridge's Passing Show of 1914.
