

THE JOURNAL OF INTERDISCIPLINARY HISTORY

Robert I. Rotberg and Theodore K. Rabb, Editors

"JIH publishes many of the most exciting state-of-the-art articles that now appear anywhere in the United States. Provocative, original, and (not least) beautifully edited, the articles in this journal set the standard for historical writing today."

— Richard L. McCormick,
Rutgers University

"An immediate success, in a field that has had many failures and many mediocre enterprises, JIH has managed for the better part of two decades to remain a magazine of consistently high interest to a wide scholarly audience."

— Jack P. Greene, The
Johns Hopkins University

Unmatched by others in its field, The Journal of Interdisciplinary History is a highly distinguished publication that takes an exceptional approach to historical study. It incorporates the concepts and quantitative methods of the new history, bringing the best of economics, sociology, political science, archaeology, and demography into historical research.

Each issue of The Journal of Interdisciplinary History presents substantive articles and book reviews on topics spanning every geographical area and chronological period.

ERIC H. MONKKONEN

Now in paperback—"By restoring a sense of human agency to American urban history Monkkonen has gone a long way toward putting the politics back in to that history. Announcing a new scholarly publication:

Journal of World History

Published by University of Hawaii Press
in cooperation with the World History Association

Historical scholarship has traditionally dealt largely with the experiences of national communities. During the past quarter-century, however, historians increasingly have come to see the need to examine the effects of powerful historical forces that do not recognize national, or even cultural, boundaries—population movements, economic fluctuations, climatic changes, transfers of technology, the spread of infectious and contagious diseases, imperial expansion, long-distance trade, and the spread of religions and ideals. As a result, a substantial body of literature examining these forces has emerged.

The Journal of World History is the first journal devoted specifically to world history as a field of research and teaching. The journal publishes articles on such global themes as:

- comparative studies of developments that affect more than one civilization or cultural region
- studies in the historiography of world history
- analyses of encounters between peoples of different civilizations or cultural regions
- reflections on conceptualization and periodization in world history

The Journal of World History will appear twice a year beginning in January 1990. Individual subscriptions are regularly US$25/yr and include membership in the World History Association. Send address information and checks, payable to the World History Association, to Professor Richard Rosen, World History Association, Department of History and Politics, Drexel University, Philadelphia, PA 19104 USA, phone (215) 895-2471. Submit manuscripts to Professor Jerry H. Bentley, Department of History, University of Hawaii, Honolulu, HI 96822 USA.

The Politics of Labor in a Textile City, 1914–1960

The Emergence of the Middle Class

Social Experience in the American City, 1760–1900

Stuart M. Blumin

“... the most important effort to date to bring the question of middle-class formation into the critical caldron of social change in early 19th-century America in the seaboard cities. The best of his evidence is from Philadelphia, whose social history he has mined with diligence and ingenuity. (There are appropriate comparisons with New York and Boston.)”

Ethnic Differences

Schooling and Social Structure Among the Irish, Italians, Jews, and Blacks in an American City, 1880–1935

Joel Perlmann

“... a most remarkable book. Perlmann’s analysis of ethnic differences in education is amazingly rich. He brings much new evidence to bear on debates about the importance of culture and class in America, and he treats the issues with great intelligence. This book will be essential for anyone concerned with the interplay of race, class, and culture in American society, and in the schools.”

The Heart of the Commonwealth

Society and Political Culture in Worcester County, Massachusetts, 1713–1861

John L. Brooke

This book interprets the impact of national and industrial revolution on the social and cultural fabric of one Massachusetts county. Exploring the role of republican and liberal ideologies in recurring cycles of political consensus and insurgency over the century and a half before the Civil War, it presents a model for understanding the social construction of public culture in early America.

Worlds Within Worlds

Structures of Life in Sixteenth-Century London

Steve Rappaport

The enormous growth of London during the early modern period brought with it major social problems. Yet, as Professor Rappaport demonstrates through analysis of the individual careers of over one thousand inhabitants, the institutional superstructure of the city was more adaptable, its small social organizations more resilient, and opportunities for social mobility far greater than many historians have recognized.
